A VISIT OF CONDOLENCE

To a Leading Man out of an Engagement,

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Who's that? By jove is that you, George? come round here where I can see;
Well! here I am—laid out on my back, as flat as a fellow can be.
And it's a deuced shame, though, when it's hot as the place below,
And nothing to do, and I wanted to take a little run, you know?

Sit down—can't you find a chair there? don't take that one by the door—
That's the rickety one I think—just throw those coats on the floor.
Haven't room here to swing a cat in, and the things get piled about,
And there's nobody here to pick them up, or give it a cleaning out.

Well! I'm glad to see you, 'pon my soul! I was getting blue;
Tell us the news, and all the fun, and how the fellows do.
By Jove! ten days I've been lying here, just as close as a tomb,
Pouring down gruel and medicine, and staring all round the room.

I was just about ready to cut my throat when you came;
Thought I'd be down at Long Branch a day—its a deuced shame!
And all the managers on, and agencies full as a hive—
And here I am, a deuced sight more dead just now than alive!

I've been out of my head, I reckon—last night I thought Lulu was there—
You remember her, don't you? the girl with the yellow hair
Down in Florida? well, she stood just where you're sitting now,
And she couldn't say a word, but she looked—well, I can't tell you how.

What are you laughing at? Well—you know I've been lying here a week—
And I've got the blues—who wouldn't?—never hearing a fellow speak.
Haven't looked at a woman, George, but the chambermaid, since then,
And when a fellow's knocked up you know, he don't want other men.

Oh, it's all very well for you—you've got a wife, you see.
And a woman's a woman, George, whatever the rest may be;
But I've got no one—except—well, somehow, old boy, you know
That sort of thing is a deuced sell, when a fellow is down so low!

Was'nt that twelve o'clock that struck? just reach me the tumbler there,
Not the one with the spoon in it—that one there on the chair.
Wouldn't a brandy smash go down! and I've lived for a week, I think,
On the d—dest sort of baby-stuff, with never a drop to drink.

How go the dips, George? Any luck? I'm cleaned out—not a red!
And how the deuce to run all this, I know no more than the dead.
There's the doctor, you know, and the druggist, and something new every day;
And I'm thinking that when I'm up, there'll be the devil—not me—to pay!

Well! its always my luck—nothing new, you see! I'll be round in a week or so—
Just when every company's full, and nothing open, you know.
I had half a chance for Vicksburch, but that's gone down, of course,
And, after all, I don't know that jobbing it pays much worse.

Time up? Well! good bye, old fellow! you've done the Samaritan rote;
Come in again when you can, for my sake, that's a good soul.
Tell Harrison, if you see him, to drop in here on his way—
He's going by to his agent's pretty near every day.

Just darken that window, won't you! I'll try to get a wink;
And put the ice-water nearer, in case I should want a drink.
That's it—ta-ta, old fellow, and shut the door as you go—
I'll pay you back some day, George, when you're laid out so low!

GRANT HOUSE, Catskill, Aug. 25th, 1871. R. H. DALEY.

A LILY AND A ROSE;

OR,

THE SCHEMER AND HIS VICTIMS.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

LILLIAN IS LOST.

Mr. Raymond Garton's mare had cause to remember the day after the masked ball, if weary legs, a panting breast, and foam-covered coat are points of remembrance.

He seldom spared anything, he did not spare her. Before the sun had risen he had reached London and Snowdon Villa before the household had awoke.

His valet, who alone heard him enter, started back as he saw the deadly white face, with its black rings beneath the eyes, and asked if he was ill.

"No, James, nothing but a headache," was the pleasant answer. Raymond Garton was always civil and polite to his inferiors. "Get my bath, will you? And, James—do not wake the house, nor say if you are asked what time I came in, or that I have a headache."

The skilful valet bowed silently, and glided away with capital imitation of his master's step.

Then Raymond Garton, with the sharp agony still gnawing at his heart, went within his room.

A few hours later, when the breakfast service was glistening upon the table, and Lillian and Mrs. Garton were seated there, the former toying abstractedly with a transparent piece of toast, the latter, with placid vacant look upon her meaningless face, pouring out the coffee.

He sauntered into the room—white still, but with a beautiful smile upon his handsome face, and an air of wonderful freshness upon every article of his attire, from the shining slippers to the purple velvet coat—and kissing his mother's hand and nodding to Lillian with a cheerful "Ah! Rosebud," seated himself at the table.

"Well, and how did the ball go off, mes belles?" he asked with a smile, opening his newspaper.

'Oh, beautifully!" exclaimed Mrs. Garton, passing him a cup of coffee. "Did it not, Lillian? Such beautiful dresses, and so—so very amusing, was it not, Lillian?"

"And did Leonard Grantley perform his escortage properly and satisfactorily, eh?" enquired Mr. Garton, addressing Mrs. Garton and looking at Lillian.

"Oh, very attentive he was," answered Mrs. Garton. "Really, no one could be more kind. He danced with Lillian twice and took great care of her. It was very hot, oh, very hot—I am sure the Colonel, who came up to me in a great brass—brass something the Roman soldiers used to wear, looked melting."

"Too hot almost for a masked ball, was it not?" again enquired Raymond, to Lilian direct this time.

"It was very hot," she said, "but the terraces were easily reached from the ball room, and I did not dance much. Will you not have some ham?"

He shook his head.

"Yes, I think I will though, a small piece."

"Why you have eaten nothing Raymond," said Mrs. Garton, nervously—"and you are looking as tired as if you had been at the ball yourself last night. Both you and Lillian are quite white."

Raymond smiled. He had been endeavoring to swallow a few mouthfuls of food to keep up appearances, but they almost choked him.

Food! he was full already—full of agony and dire pain, and yet the smile!

"I have a headache, ma mere," he said, softly. "You know how fond I am of curry; it always makes me ill, and yet I cannot withstand it. They brought me some at the club last night, and I said 'no,' quite sternly to the waiter, but—I took some nevertheless. I have no will," he added, with a sigh, "and the temptation was too great."

Mrs. Garton looked at him with nervous pity.

"You must take some of that mixture Dr. Pearce gives me. Let me ring the bell for it?"

"No—no," said Raymond, a frown for one instant crossing his white face—every word was an effort—"a mere nothing—it will go off, as the ladies say, after breakfast, with the aid of a cigar."

"I dont think a cigar will do you any good," said Mrs. Garton. "I don't see how it can. Now a little fresh air? Lillian and I are going out shopping we will have the open carriage if you will come, Raymond?"

He hesitated, or rather pretended to, enjoying with a bitter pleasure Lillian's start and crimson flush at his mother's words, then replied:—

"Thanks, ma mere, nothing would give me greater pleasure, but I have to run into the country on business—to see Pritchard (his business man) and so am obliged to say nay."

Lillian felt a deep thankfulness, and in gratitude to the merciful providence that would take her silken guardian away from Snowdon Villa for the day, asked Raymond to take some more ham.

"No, Rosebud, I'm afraid I can't eat this morning. I will try a cigar, notwithstanding ma mere's opinion that it will be useless as a restorative. Then he rose languidly—even smothering a yawn—and strolled leisurely into the conservatory.

To look at him, one would say that Raymond Garton had a heavy fit of ennui upon him, and that exertion of mind or body would, that morning, be impossible to him.

An hour later the carriage dashed up the drive, and Lillian and Mrs. Garton appeared at the billiard room door, dressed for their shopping.

"Can I do anything for you, Raymond?" asked Mrs. Garton, buttoning her gloves.

"Nothing—thanks," he replied, from the depths of a rocking chair, and looking up sleepily. "Bye, bye," he added, with a pleasant smile. "I shall be gone when you come back."

Mrs. Garton smiled nervously, and the two ladies retreated down the broad stairs. He waited until the two bloods had dashed through the gates, and then sprang noiselessly to his feet, all his admirably assumed langor gone.

In ten minutes his velvet lounging coat was changed for a closely buttoned regent, boots had taken the place of his easy slippers, and he was within his cab.

"Do not spare her," he said to the groom, after telling him to drive towards Howell's.

Then drawing the curtain of his cab he looked through one corner for the man he wanted. Yes, there he was. There was the brougham, and by the door stood Leonard Grantley.

His face was somewhat pale and anxious, although he tried to appear as unconcerned and indifferent as the rest of the gazers at the silks and satins glistening in the windows.

Raymond Garton drew in his breath. All was going on well. He motioned to the groom to drive on, and the cab dashed from the street home again.

No time was to be lost, and Raymond Garton knew it. He gave instructions to his valet to pack up. Spent two hours within his study with books and accounts, and telegraphed to the city to his solicitor and also to Mr. Levy, these words:—

"You may sweep down now," and made every preparation for a long absence from the exquisite Snowdon Villa which had so well served his turn.

In the midst of the mass of business affairs, while he was racing against time, his great sorrow was nearly buried; yet every now and then, as he paused to wipe the cold perspiration from his white, aching brow, the dead despairing pain struck through him, and a groan of anguish would force itself, now he was alone, through his thin lips.

Yet he had no thought of turning back, impossible as the task seemed. He had put his hand to the plough of ill doing, and he would not turn back. He had calculated that Lillian would return somewhere near five o'clock. Two hours more, only two hours more? Then he drew the remaining papers toward him and fell to work again.

And now all was finished, he could carry out his plan without let or hindrance. Then, for the first time, he broke down so far as to hide his face in his long white hands. But it was only for a moment.

Softly gathering together a heap of papers he had thrown on one side, he threw them in the grate and set fire to them, watching the ashes as they fell, with a face already growing calm and placid in preparation for the master stroke.

* * * * *

"Raymond!" exclaimed Mrs. Garton, rushing into the drawing-room, an hour later, with her bonnet on, and her hands clasped nervously together. "Oh, Raymond! I have lost Lillian!"

"Lost Lillian!" echoed Raymond Garton, twisting round in his chair, and dropping his Pall Mall on his knees. "Lost Lillian! how absurd," and he laughed a musical laugh of supreme ridicule.

"Oh, don't laugh, Raymond," replied the nervous woman, in an agony of embarrassment. "I have lost her. I was choosing some silks at Howell's—you know, on the first floor—and she told me she was going to look at some ribbons down stairs. She went, and I waited a long time for her, and then I thought I would go down and help her choose—(I have a little taste in ribbons)," said the poor woman with humble pride), but—but she'd gone, gone out of the side door half an hour ago, and—I've lost her."

Raymond strolled to the glass—How well everything was going!—and stroked his silken moustache with a soft, caressing, velvety movement, and laughed again.

"Nonsense again, ma mere. She went to get one of those indigestible buns you women are so fond of devouring, and then met a friend, women will gossip, and there's the whole mystery explained." And he smoothed a wrinkle from his perfectly fitting coat.

"But she's been gone two or three hours!" argued Mrs. Garton, falling into a chair and looking very much inclined to cry.

"The longer she has been gone, the sooner will she return," replied Raymond softly. "Lillian is not a child to be lost in the street and be found near a lamp post with her apron in her eyes, and a dab of mud across her nose. Besides, a policeman would bring her home if she were. Be comforted, oh mother of Israel! She'll return to thee." And at the flowery conceit of his language the amusing Raymond laughed again, a laugh, which, with all its musical silkiness, set Mrs. Garton's nerves on edge.

He walked to the bell.

"Here, ma mere, I'll ring for your maid. Dinner will be ready directly, and I'll wager Miss Lillian returns before we've got clear of the soup."

With this smiling consolation Mrs. Garton had to be content, and was carried off by her maid, still murmuring nervously that she had lost Lillian.

Dinner was served and the soup half got through, and then there came a loud knock at the door.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Garton, nearly jumping off her chair, while even Raymond Garton snapped his teeth at his bread with a vicious bite.

The footman opened the door and admitted Lillian She was flushed, a bright crimson—and her eyes were sparkling.

"Lillian!" exclaimed Mrs. Garton in joyful reproach—Oh!" The girl came up to her and kissed her. Mrs. Garton burst into tears at once. "Oh, Lillian, how you frightened me! I thought you were run over."

"Run over!" echoed the lovely girl. A merry laugh ringing out in accompaniment. "Run over! No, no, you will not get rid of me so easily. I am so sorry I frightened you," she said softly, and gravely bending over the nervous face and untying her bonnet strings.

"Where have you been, Lillian?" inquired Mr. Garton, scientifically peppering his salmon. "For you have frightened Mrs. Garton and me." And he smiled softly, lifting his dark eyebrows.

"I missed Mrs. Garton," she said, "and went for a drive with Lady Maolean." It was the first lie Lillian had told, and she colored furiously over it and betrayed herself immediately. "Don't wait for me," she continued, turning to the door. "I hate fish, you know, so I get benefitted by my naughtiness," and then she ran from the room, and Mr. Garton bent over his plate and added a little more pepper to his salmon. How beautifully all went on! and how the pain at his heart throbbed when the ring of her bright laughter brought to his memory, like a flash of sunlight or the scent of dead flowers, the merry laughter of another girlish heart. She came down again soon, the flush still upon her face and the light still in her eyes.

She eat little, her hands moved restlessly amongst the glittering glass and shining silver, and as her fingers toyed with a rose that rested against her soft, white bosom, she lifted her fingers to her lips in a silent caress, then let them fall upon the flower again.

And from beneath his black eyebrows Mr. Raymond Garton watched his lovely ward, watched her as an angler watches the silver fish he has caught upon his cruel hook, as it struggles in vain, its beauty shimmering in the sun as it dies.

They talked, or rather he did, for Lillian seemed scarcely heeding his soft glibe talk and was wrapped up in her own thoughts, and when they might be; starting even, so deep was her reverie, when he addressed her every now and then by her name.

And at last the dinner came to its close, and Mrs. Garton got nervously off her chair.

"I shall be with you directly," said Mr. Garton, as they walked towards the door. "I don't care for almonds and raisins, and I can drink what wine I want at a glassful without lingering over it for the mere sake of doing so. Go, my cherubims, and I will join you in that ladies heaven—the drawing-room, before Lillian can have played 'The Maiden's Prayer.'"

CHAPTER XXIX.

DECEIVED.

According to his promise, Raymond sauntered noiselessly into the drawing-room a quarter of an hour after the two ladies had been ensconced there.

Lillian was seated on a low fauteil, near the conservatory entrance, with a volume of Heath's Book of Beauties in her hand, and wondering whether she was half as handsome as the lazy swan-necked ladies who adorned its pages, and thinking, perhaps, of something else, with the flush still upon her cheek and her hand resting on the crimson rose.

Raymond Garton walked up to her, and said suddenly, but with his usual softness, as he dropped into a chair beside her:—

"Lillian have you seen Leonard Grantley this morning?"

She turned white, and her hand fell from the rose to her lap.

"Yes—sir," she murmured, trying to speak indifferently, "I saw him in Regent street."

"Hem!" answered Raymond, thoughtfully, "I wonder whether he will call here to-day? I have something of his that I should like to return him."

"Indeed," she said, examining the Lady Dowager Crane diamonds with special and particular interest, vainly endeavoring to keep the book from quivering in her hand.

"Yes, he's a careless young gentleman and takes as little heed of his trinkets as of his money. See!" and he took from his waistcoat pocket a small gold locket which Leonard had dropped a few weeks before and which Lillian remembered seeing hang upon his watch chain.

He held it out to her, and almost unthinkingly she took it.

"Perhaps you had better take care of it, he said, leaning his head back, and closing his eyes—"I am almost sure to lose it—I am so unfortunate with everything that is small enough to be lost and is not tied on to me," and he laughed plaintively.

"By the way," he said pleasantly, after a little pause, occupied by him in glancing keenly from under his lowered brow. "By the way, I haven't opened that pretty trinket; let me see the shadowing of Master Leonard's lady-love?" and he held one of his hands, with a soft laugh, for the return of the locket.

Lillian handed it with something like a smile, and a decided little start. She knew who was Leonard's lady love without opening the locket. Was not the knowledge filling her frame with an exquisite delight almost amounting to pain?

She handed him the locket.

"How do you open these things?" he said, after a moment's fumbling at the snap. "You try, your fingers are smaller than mine," and he passed it back again.

She took it and opened it, and then let it fall suddenly to the ground.

"Is that Leonard Grantley's?" she said, quietly, in so low and startled a voice that the man at her side started, although he was prepared for a shock.

"Oh, yes, I saw it on his chain a few months ago; last night I found it in my study, where it had rolled into a corner. Things always do roll into a corner, I never dressed in a hurry in my life but a shirt stud sprang out of my valet's hand and rolled under the bed or the wardrobe. But what made you ask the question?"

"Nothing," she answered, then rising, she walked towards the conservatory, turning as she reached the dividing curtains, she said:—"Did you say you had not opened this locket?"

"Yes," he answered. "Is there anything remarkable in it, let me see——"

And he rose and followed her. She took the locket from her bosom where she had thrust it, and held it out as she would have held some poisonous adder.

He opened it easily this time, and exclaimed, as he saw a beautiful girlish face enshrined therein:—

"A pretty face! Master Leonard's a close boy not to mention his little fiancee!" Lillian's face paled at the word.

"She may be his sister," she breathed almost to herself.

"He hasn't got nor ever had one," replied Raymond, with a laugh. "No, it's his lady-love, Rosebud, you may depend," he said, gliding up to where she stood, and drawing her arm through his. "Shall we look at the flowers? We must have some fun with Leonard over this little discovery," he continued, keeping his eyes off her face yet knowing as well as if he saw her quailing cheek, that it was growing whiter and whiter at every other word.

"Do you know Lillian, I have taken a great fancy to our young friend, a great fancy, he is not going right I'm afraid?"

"Not going right?" she repeated in a low, gasping tone.

"Going wrong you know as regards money. He always was poor, now he is in debt, deeply in debt, poor fellow! He is young, inexperienced, noble, and of course, as a necessary sequence, extravagant."

"Ah!" and Mr. Garton sighed. "These young, handsome fellows, it's difficult to keep steady. I have given him some advice, which, if he takes, will clear off all his debts, collect the number of bills that are flying about like kites and make a great man of him. Yes, Leonard must marry an heiress. He will never work for money, he must marry it. I hope the little lady has the golden dross which is so necessary for our young friend's happiness."

And once more Raymond Garton gazed at the woman's face which he himself had purchased at a photographers, and placed in its golden setting a few days before. He shut it too with a snap, but did not return it to her.

"Do you think that I am cruel after all that Leonard is already heart-bound? for I fancied with some alarm that he was growing too attentive to you."

The mental agony he was suffering himself made him merciless. He felt no pity as he felt her arm quiver against his, and looking round for the first time he saw the eyes close for a second, and then raise themselves to the roof with an inexpressible agony.

"I am very glad," he continued softly, almost benevolently, "that I was mistaken. I could not have given my consent, for I have your happiness too well at heart, my dear Lillian, to see you unsuitably mated."

She said no word. She could not. Her heart seemed freezing beneath his look—her soul wearing into holes as his words dropped like molten lead, softly, yet so fiercely painful, as she still leant on his arm. They had reached the top of the conservatory, and turned.

He remained silent for a moment or two, then broke into a low laugh. "What could have made Leonard so quiet over this little affair of his? I cannot understand it! I hope my surmises are right, and that the pretty face has the gold with it. I hope so. Perhaps its an unfortunate affair, a true love, you know, that Master Leonard meant to forget for the rich heiress I have advised him to take; that would explain his silence concerning this little love of his."

She could bear no more.

With something like a groan she sank upon a seat, covering her white face with her trembling hands.

"Lillian!" exclaimed Mr. Garton, with a great appearance of alarm, but not loud enough to reach Mrs. Garton in the drawing-room. "Are you ill?" And he sat down beside her, and tried to draw her hands from before her face.

Softly, it is true, but she shuddered as his cold hands touched hers, and shrank into the corner of the seat.

"What is the matter?"

Nothing could be more genuinely anxious and troubled than the tone of his enquiry, and though he dropped his hand from hers, he laid it on her dress with quite a paternal gesture.

Still she remained silent, motionless as a statue, save for the shudder that ran through her perfect frame.

Then he started with an exclamation of alarm and anger.

"Lillian!" he cried—but quietly—"you do no not care for this Leonard Grantley? Tell me, I implore you, that I am wrong! He is nothing to you—be——"

He paused in a state of agitation as like reality as anything fictitious could possibly be. Still she did not move or speak.

He sank down again with a sigh of relief. "No, no, it cannot be! He is a gentleman and would not act dishonorably. He cannot have said a word to you. Yet your agitation. I—Lillian!" he continued, starting to his feet. "You do not care for Leonard Grantley!"

She could bear it no longer. Standing up she faced him, her head thrown back, her eyes filled with a despairing light, her lips pale and trembling.

"I love him!"

"Love him!" echoed Raymond Garton with another start and look of deep sorrow and pity. "Oh, Lillian, my poor child! Tell me he has never said a word to you of love?"

"What!" he exclaimed, with well imitated passion as she remained silent, her eyes covered and her hands clasped in an agony.

"The scoundrel! I will——"

"Hush," she cried, clinging to his up-lifted threatening arm. "Hush, you must do him no harm. He is my husband!"

"Your husband!" he breathed, his eyes extended with horror and rage, and then softening to a look of pity almost sublime. "Lillian! The villain! Poor Lillian."

"Why, why do you pity me so?" she asked in so low a tone that he scarcely heard her:—"What has he done? He loves me!" and she turned her white face to his in an agony of terror.

Mr. Raymond Garton covered his dark face with his white hands and groaned:—

"My poor girl! my poor girl! Do you not see? He is a villain. He has married you for your money, he does not love you, see here" (and he held out the locket), "I understand it all now! Alas! how blind I have been! Driven to despair by his debts, harrassed by his creditors, he has behaved like a scoundrel and deceived you!"

His words cut her to the heart like a knife. It was true. Oh, God! what should she do!

For a minute Mr. Raymond Garton seemed overcome with grief, then his manner changed.

"He shall answer for this!" he exclaimed in a threatening voice. "He shall answer for this, I will punish him for this crime. Yes, crime, it is a crime to slay your happiness so cruelly, to deceive you, my poor child, so basely. I will——"

"No, no!" she cried, clinging to him again, her face blanched with terror on his account now:—"No, no, you shall not! I love him. You must not harm him, I love him. He is my husband!"

"By heaven, I will kill him!" he exclaimed fiercely. "Villain! When were you married when and where?"

She hid her face in her hands again.

"This morning, at Islington."

"Heaven! was ever to be done!" he exclaimed, pacing backwards and forwards like a tiger, but keeping his eyes fixed with the watchfulness of a lynx, on the shrinking form. "Lillian, you must leave England at once, you must fly from this scoundrel who has deceived you, to night, to-night."

"To night!" she breathed, shuddering.

He ground an impatient oath to silence beneath his teeth. Why did she not fly into the indignant passion he expected?

"Yes, to-night, he will be here perhaps to claim you; soon you will be in his power. Girl, can you stand there and be duped by an heartless villain who loves another, and marries you but to save himself from ruin."

He had done it; she started as if she had been stung.

"What do you wish?" she said, in so unnaturally calm a tone that he started a gain. "Come—come with me he said," and he took her arm; silently they passed through the conservatory up the stairs and into the study, a lamp was burning on the writing table, he turned it up. "Lillian," he said, "if you wish to escape you must do as I bid you; there is a train leaves London for Paris, to-night——"

"I know it," she said in a broken voice.

He paused for a moment. "We must go by that; he shall be baulked yet if you but obey me;" then he placed a sheet of paper before her. "Write as I dictate." She took the pen almost mechanically, but her cold, trembling fingers refused to hold it—again he ground his teeth—time was flying.

"Drink this," he said, going to a cupboard and pouring some wine into a glass. She took it and drank it; then he waited a few minutes. "Now write."

"LEONARD GRANTLEY.—You will never look upon my face again. I go from you to-night and forever. Do not seek to learn the cause, nor attempt to follow me. I write this under no restraint or coercion whatever, and nothing you can say or do will affect my determination to see you no more. LILLIAN GARTON."

With trembling fingers she wrote it word for word, pausing once only as a sob shook her frame at the time, "you will never look upon my face again!" and Raymond Garton, standing over her with white face and blazing eyes stretched out his white hand and clutched the letter. "Obey me still and you are saved; aye, more, revenged! He married you for your money, he sh ll not touch one penny of it. Go to your room," he continued in a hoarse whisper, bending over her with the gesture of a vulture, his hand still clutching the wet letter, "go to your room and get ready to start; you were prepared for flight. It is well! you fly—but with me!"

Then he watched her as she rose, her face white and expressionless, watched her as she passed slowly down the stairs and into her own room, then he sank into a chair gasping for breath and struggling for air. While the gnawing mad, was his success and the agony burning his soul driving him senseless? Oh, no! he must be calm.

Time was short, he dried the letter on the blotting paper, folded it in an envelope directed to Mr. Leonard Grantley and then stole down stairs.

"When Mr. Grantley calls to-night, give him this letter," he said to a servant in the hall, and then passed on to the drawing-room.

For half an hour he remained talking with Mrs. Garton, then, noiselessly as before, he stole to his own room to emerge shortly after, dressed in a dark travelling suit, with a calm smile upon his face, and the air from Faust upon his lips. And then a veiled figure, with bowed head, joined him in the hall, the roll of carriage wheels was vanishing rapidly in the distance, and Lillian, as she had written, had—gone.

* * * * *

One hour later the footman ushered into the drawing-room Mr. Leonard Grantley.

He was pale and agitated, though trying to appear at ease.

"Ah, James, I was just returning from the west and looked in to say good night. Have the ladies retired?"

"Mrs. Garton is in, sir; I will call her. Mr. Garton and Miss, please, have started for the Continent. I was to give you this——Good heaven, sir! Are you ill?"

He might well ask.

Leonard Grantley staggered against the wall as if he had been shot.

His face livid with horror—his hands clenching the open letter until the nails pierced the paper and entered his flesh.

"Gone! Merciful Heaven!——"

CHAPTER XXX.

WANDERING.

Leonard Grantley stood for a moment turned to stone; then he raised his hand and dashed the cold beads of perspiration from his forehead.

"Where has she gone?" he said, in so altered a voice that the wretched woman gave a little cry and wrung her hands harder than ever.

"Oh, what does it all mean?" she cried piteously.

"Where has she gone?" repeated Leonard, still in the same metallic tones.

"I don't know! I don't know!" she cried. "He has told me nothing, except that he has gone away for a long time. I don't know what to do. I'm frightened—very frightened, and—oh! Mr. Grantley!"

Leonard rose, with all his pain he could pity this poor, feeble creature.

"My poor lady," he said more gently, bending over her. "Be calm if you can. See, I am suffering, but I keep it down, for I hope all is not lost yet. Come, try and tell me all you know."

"I don't know anything," she repeated, trying to stop her tears. "Raymond came to me with everything settled. He said he was going to take Lillian away from England at her own desire, and told me to carry on this house, and get what money I wanted from the lawyer, and then they went."

Leonard groaned at the end of this speech slowly dragged out and punctuated with nervous sobs.

"Has he not told you where they have gone?" he said hoarsely. He could make nothing of it whatever, it was all a dark mystery.

"No, he would not tell me," she replied, "Oh, something has happened, I know! He looked so cold and determined, and Lillian was white and ill. What shall I do?"

Leonard sank into a chair and covered his face again.

"But what are you terrified for, Mr. Grantley?" inquired Mrs. Gar on. "Oh, you have not heard any bad news?"

Leonard shook his head impatiently.

"No, no; not the sort of bad news you expect," he replied. "Then why are you so——"

"Hush!" he said, with something like a groan. I loved her, Mrs. Garton."

"Oh dear! oh dear!" she said, crying again. "And she has gone!"

Here at last were the words spoken in reality. They struck him in all their truth as a blow would have done, and he rose, took up his hat, and moved with averted head to the door.

The poor woman saw what she had done directly, and jumping up ran after him.

"Oh, don't look like that Leonard!" she said, in an agony of nervous repentance, calling him by his Christian name. "I did not mean to blurt it out like that. Oh, don't go!"

He took her hand within his cold one, and pressed it gently.

"Why should I stay?" he said. "I shall go mad if I do not do something. There is some infernal mystery in this that must be cleared up. I will clear it up," he cried, his sorrow turning to passion. "Why should our lives be wrecked, for I know she loved me this morning, in this hidden way!

"Look!" he cried, holding out the note:—"Read it and tell me if I am awake or dreaming, sane or mad. Explain it in some way or other, or it will drive me mad.

Poor fellow, he did not mean to frighten her, he was nearly mad with grief, consternation, pain and rage, and could not speak softly or calmly. She started back from him and the outstretched note, with a cry of alarm at his fierce eyes, and buried herself with a scream in the fauteil.

Leonard turned and strode into the hall. "Go in to your mistress," he said sternly to a servant, and then passed out. The night had clouded over and it was raining, the commencement of a heavy shower. At the gate he stopped and hesitated. He could not go home. He wanted air to cool his burning brow and help to calm him, so he turned sharply to the right and strode through the night, his head lowered and his hands buried in the pockets of his coat.

He could realise nothing yet, nothing save that he had lost his bride of the morning, and that he was striding through the darkness, alone and desolate. He walked on and on, leaving stone houses behind him, and getting into country lanes with green hedges and trees. It was raining hard and pelting on his hat and light overcoat, and drenching them, yet he did not seem to notice the downpour, or the darkness. Once or two, he lifted his hat as if even its light weight were too heavy for him, and passed his hand across his knitted brow with a weary, troubled gesture. At last, the physical fatigue pulled him up.

For the first time during the hours he had been walking he noticed that he was wet through. The physical weariness acted as a counter-irritation and somewhat calmed him.

And as he leant against a gate to think—as if he not been thinking all the time!—he started with an exclamation of rage at his folly.

What was he about! Was he mad indeed to be there standing like a blind owl when his wife was dying from him. Where was his manliness that he could stand still with his hands in his pockets and let her go!

He would pursue them. Oh, mad, senseless idiot that he was, to have let his wits go wool gathering all these hours, when every moment was of vital importance! Turning his face homewards he literally ran, the rain pouring down all this time and beating against his white, wan face, so strong was the new impulse to follow after, and catch the two who had dared to part married and then fled from him. But his will was greater than his strength. He strode away from St. John Wood, without heed to direction, and now endeavoring to return, he found that he had lost all record of the way. He looked around with a groan. He had got into an unknown region.

There were houses everywhere—great big stucco plaster monstrosities in long rows of uniform hideousness. What could he do? Every moment was of consequence. Every hour put miles between him and his wife of an hour, every moment rendered this last hope more forlorn.

He pulled his coat closer round him, the rain was beginning to chill him, and he walked softly on; he must reach a main thoroughfare soon he thought, and there find a cab-stand. At last, at the end of the long, dismally quiet street stood three hansom cabs. He ran up to the first one and laying his hand on the shaft, looked around eagerly for the cabman.

"Quick, quick!" he cried, one foot already on the board. "Drive to Walner street as fast as your horse will go."

The man looked at him curiously.

"Walner street?" he repeated, hesitatingly, scratching his head. "That's a good bit from here."

Leonard stamped his foot impatiently.

"What do you mean?" he asked hoarsely, "what place is this?" and he looked around hastily."

The man stared at him and muttered something between his teeth.

"D——n you, can't you answer?" growled out Leonard in such a voice that the cab driver instinctively drew back.

"All right, guv'nor," he answered apologetically, "give a cove time; it struck me as being such a rum go, a gentleman not knowin' where he was, and bein' sober too."

Leonard signed impatiently.

"Yes, yes," he said. "What place do you say this is?"

"This is Islington," said the man, still eyeing this singular fare with suspicious curiosity.

"Islington!" echoed Leonard, turning livid in the gaslight. "Heaven!" and his head fell upon his breast.

"Can you drive me to Walner street?" he asked again.

"Well——" commenced the man.

Leonard pulled out his purse.

"There is a sovereign," he said, dropping it into the man's already out-stretched palm. "If you use all haste, I will give you another when we reach there."

In a moment the man had finished taking off his horse's nose bag and mounted the box, and Leonard leaping in, bowed his aching brow in his hands.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

MRS. F. S. CHANFRAU.

This charming and popular actress, nee Miss Henrietta Baker, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1837, and in that city, at the Assembly Buildings, she made her first appearance in public as a vocalist. Her first appearance upon the dramatic stage was made Sept. 19th, 1854, at the City Museum, in the same city, playing Miss Apsley in the "Willow Copse." A short time after this we find her enrolled as a member of the company at the Arch Street Theatre. For the season of 1857-8 she was engaged at the National Theatre, Cincinnati, O., then under the management of Mr. J. Lewis Baker, a relative of Mrs. Chanfrau. During this season she met Mr. F. S. Chanfrau, whom she afterward married. Coming to New York she was engaged at the Winter Garden Theatre, where she remained several seasons, making marked and rapid progress in her profession, and attracting considerable attention by her musical efforts. After leaving there she was enrolled as a member of the company at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, where her sojourn was short, owing to breach of faith on the part of the management. However, the Bostonians had had a glimpse of her artistic merits, and when Selwyn's Theatre was opened she was offered a lucrative engagement as leading lady, which she accepted, and on her appearance she at once found favor with the public, which steadily increased during the season, and ere its close she was considered one of the greatest favorites that had ever appeared in that city. She remained at the theatre during the Selwyn regime, also under Mr. Fechter's management, when the name of the theatre was changed to the Globe. At the conclusion of the season of 1869-70 she resolved to accept no more stock engagements, and to attempt a starring tour throughout the country. Placing the business arrangements of the proposed tour under the direction of Mr. G. W. Tayleure, he, during the summer, concluded star engagements at the principal theatres of the country, extending over a period of thirty weeks, which she is now engaged in fulfilling. Thus far her success has been most flattering. She is a talented actress, excelling in domestic drama and comedy, though she gives satisfaction in whatever role she undertakes. She possesses a beautiful face, a finely moulded form, a clear, resonant voice under thorough control, and a very distinct enunciation. Her presence is good, her actions graceful, and her bearing lady-like, evincing culture and good breeding.

A REASON why a piano was not saved at a fire was because none of the firemen could play on it.

MY VISION.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I sometimes play billiards; I'm not a 'dead shot;'
But I know something how the game goes,
And I've made up my mind that henceforth I will no
Try to discount a chap from Cohoes.

One night, feeling skillful and playing my best,
Somehow I was led to suppose
If I made all I could and "scratched" all the rest,
I could discount a chap from Cohoes.

So I chose the white ball and he chose the spot;
And the nicest one also I chose.
I chose the first "bet up" and he the first shot,
This chap all the way from Cohoes.

He led off and missed and then I made a run;
And straightway that fellow arose,
And when he sat down that game was all done;
He must have played some in Cohoes.

That night, about midnight, I saw in a dream
A skeleton form with a skeleton nose:
And he spoke in a voice that couldn't but seem
Like the voice of that chap from Cohoes:—

"Have you heard of the game by the ghastly light,
Which is played by the forms of death,
By the skeleton forms that haunt the night
With never a soul or a breath?

"The table is built—on a marble bed,
The marbid slab of a tomb,
And the pockets are staring skulls of the dead,
While are brought from the regions of gloom

"And the light is the flickering ghastly light
Flashed from the eyes of Death;
The cues are bones from the realms of night,
And the air a poisonous breath.

"The Devil is marker and Hell the stakes;
Would you like to be champion there?
Then hold to the spell that never breaks,
Or beware of the curse—BUWARE."

If ever so blind or ever so wilful,
I never again will propose,
Though ever so lucky or ever so skillful,
To discount a chap from Cohoes.

"PETE JENKINS;"

OR,

THE NAKED TRUTH.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Our scouting party was pretty well played out as we went into camp at a place called the Devil's Court House, on the Phantom Hill road, near the Colorado river. For three days and nights we had been on the keen jump after a party of Kioways, who had been down among the settlements running off stock. Having lost the trail at the Colorado, the officer in charge concluded to go into camp on its bank. This appeared to suit all hands, for in a short time the horses were picketed out, the camp kettles on a roaring fire, and all hands sitting around smoking. The first one to speak was Fred. Farrier, saying:—

"I'd give most anything for a drink of whiskey."

"Well, I'm just the plum to suck yer mouth," said Billy Boldshow, as he started for a canteen he had hitched to his saddle, which he took care to have at no great distance from him. The boys looked at each other in astonishment, as much as to say can it be possible. We were not kept long in suspense, for Billy soon returned with the canteen, and, sure enough, it was well filled with whiskey. Our party being small, this canteen of condensed jim-jams was a god-send. It's not often a party of soldiers can enjoy such an article two hundred and fifty miles north-west of San Antonio. The whiskey had the effect of putting the party in a story telling humor, and, as Billy had furnished the steam, he had the right of way. Billy was, undoubtedly, the best rider in the regiment, notwithstanding the fact he had never been to Carlisle—the riding school for the cavalry arm of the service. Rockwell and Stone's circus had been Billy's school, where he served an apprenticeship many years ago. This was known to the boys, so we struck him for a circus story. The following is Billy Boldshow's story, as near as I can recollect:—When I was a little shaver I ran off with a circus company and remained with it for a long time. I liked the business first rate, and got so as to do quite a good act. Reddy McCutchen, our clown, used to say I was the best "Pete Jenkins" in the business. Reddy was a trump; I was his pal in everything, and he was my right bower. But Reddy and I had to separate at last; this separation happened in New Jersey. Our company had a row with a crowd called the "Glass House Boys," and, Reddy and myself figured conspicuously that night in putting heads on two of the rough's that a circus party was sure to find at Dummer's Lot, we left for parts unknown. Reddy started for New York and I for Philadelphia, where I enlisted for this regiment. Shortly afterwards I was sent to my company, then stationed at San Antonio.

About a year after I had joined the troop and had participated in several scouts, a Mexican circus came to town and of course all hands were in for the show. The first morning of the show I went to see the greasers pitch their canvas, and, to my surprise, who should I meet but my old pal, Reddy McCutchen, who was travelling as clown with the Great Mexican Circus. Reddy was INFORMATION.—Marriages with deceased wives' sisters were formerly considered incestuous and contrary to public morality, but are now legalized in England. Such marriages are not incestuous or invalid by the municipal law of New York, though not lawful in some of the states. As to whether such marriages are desirable must depend on circumstances. The Rev. Dr. Matthews, of New York, in an able argument in favor of such marriages, delivered before the General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, in June, 1843, says that in every state except Virginia, such marriages are lawful. See Kent's Commentaries, vol. 2, page 80, note (a), and it is clear that the prohibitions in the Levitical law do not reach these cases. In most Catholic countries such marriages are prohibited, but dispensations are easily obtained.

BLIFF JOHNSON.—"1, 2, 3 and 4 are playing a game of euchre: 1 and 3 are partners; 1 deals the cards, takes it up and plays alone. 2 says that he will play it alone against him and makes three tricks. How many points does 2 make? Also state how many points 2 makes if he takes the whole five tricks."..... No. 2 had no right to play alone after No. 1 had so declared. No. 2, in securing three tricks, euchres No. 1, for which he scores two points; all he could score in any circumstances.

M. W. B.—1. There is no international copyright between England and the United States. 2. In answer to your second question, "Can an injunction be put upon a person for playing a piece of music in violation by an Englishman and stop your playing it?" we would say there has been no decision under the new copyright law, from a competent court—the United States circuit court—upon this point. It is, therefore, useless to express any opinion or conjecture upon the subject.

THOMAS SMITH, Manchester, N. H.—We should certainly say that a man who repeatedly risked his own life to save that of others is entitled to a reward. He acted wisely in refusing to be drawn into a fight under the circumstances you mention, and it will evince more courage if he persists in doing so than if he allowed the taunts of those who seek to take an unmanly advantage of him to alter his determination. You are entitled to the money.

HARRY.—1. The judges can either fine or suspend the driver, but if they adopt the latter penalty, the horse is not ruled off in consequence, and if the judges give him the heat, he can start again with a fresh driver, which they have the right to ignore unless the power is appointed. 2. It is discretionary with the judges to order him to go over the course or not, when no horse appears against him for the second or third heat.

J. J. B., Arthur, Ont.—1. Goldsmith Maid will be 15 years old next spring; she first trotted at a county fair in Orange county when 3 years old. 2. Lady Thorn is 14 years old; her first public trot was on the Union Course, L. I., June 1st, 1865. 3. Dexter is 15 years old, and his first trot was on the Fashion Course, L. I., May 4th 1864.

J. S., Chatham, Ont.—All bets between King of the Forest and Albert Victor, in the Derby, are drawn, in consequence of these horses having run a dead heat for second place. For a full definition of the meaning of the word, we refer you to Webster's dictionary.

A. S. C.—"In playing a four-handed game of euchre, I have the deal; my opponent orders it up and plays it alone. I play it alone against him: he gets three tricks. How many points is he entitled to?".....You had no right to play alone against him. He makes one point only.

W. T. S., Boston.—1. D cannot take the card exposed by the dealer in helping, but it must be placed at the bottom of the pack and the next card given him. A new deal is not required. 2. Budd Doble rote Dexter when he made 2:18; Johnny Murphy when he made 2:18 1-5.

G. W. M., Philadelphia.—"In a game of all fours, both parties have scored six. One party begs—the cards are run, and Jack is turned up. The beggar holds no trump. Who wins, the maker or holder of the five who turns Jack?".....The player who turned Jack wins.

R. H. L., Fall River.—1. The city of London is not a county, but is in the county of Middlesex. 2. Cant's work, 75 00. 3. The Pall Mall Gazette does not exist; the Pall Mall Budget has superseded it. Price $15 per year.

A CONSTANT READER.—Before the signing of the naturalization treaty with Great Britain, a residence of five years and a declaration of intention to become a citizen, was necessary. Now it is but twelve months, and one dwelling, before a vote could be obtained; under existing circumstances it may have been altered.

THE MATE, New Orleans, La.—It is undoubtedly a swindle. You would probably receive a box of sawdust or brickbats as commodity in return for your money, or possibly small photographs of the no es.

A. S. B., Susquehanna, Pa.—We have already published the facts in the case of Hiltabrandle's trotting mile that he broke in 2:17, and we think she is fairly entitled to that record, despite the efforts made to disparage the performance.

LEE, Cannelton, Ind.—1. Salina and Fadladeen, who both ran a mile in the same time, 1:48, have not the same number of dashes in a mile. 2. The time of any one mile in a two or three mile race does not go on the record.

G. A. K., Angelica, N. Y.—1. No base can be run or player out out on a ball striking the batsman, such ball being delivered to and held in the hands of the pitcher while he is in his position. 2. Nine and a half seconds.

C. F. F.—Cummings' services are claimed by both the Haymakers and Athletic clubs. He signed papers with the former. Hagler, too, is said to have been engaged by the Athletics. The latter, however, it is said, remains with the Mutuals.

WOODEN NUMBER.—1. See list of salaries of Chicago players. 2. Read article on cricketers. 3. He is engaged for the Boston nine. 4. First raise $10,000 as a starting fund. 5. A better could easily be chosen.

N. M., Star of the East.—No dates for any games of the series having been set down in the bond, of course no forfeit can be demanded unless a day was agreed upon, and one or other of the contesting nines failed to appear.

H. W. M., Wintersett, Iowa.—The base bag is the base, no matter where it happens to be temporarily moved to. The player, standing on what represented the base, was not out.

D. S. M., Norwich, Conn.—"I having only one point to go, and making the three points he gave, with high, Jack, game, goes out 6 from 8's low."

F. J. P., New Orleans.—It is not etiquette to do as you state The spoon should be placed in the saucer, on the left hand side of the cup.

JOHN TAYLOR.—A marquis ranks higher than an earl in England.

L. TOUCHET.—Sixty cents for each time up to thirteen, when a deduction of 20 per cent. is made.

BOATMAN, Portland, Me.—The boat having started to go to the post, by order of the referee or starter, the bet holds good, and you lose.

F. D. Philadelphia.—F bet that H would make his first base. As H had his first base given him on called balls he did not "make" it. F loses.

W. J. R., Elmira.—We have commenced a series of articles on professional players, the first of which appears this week. These will answer all queries about playing and batting.

THE FIRE IN CHICAGO.

We are beginning to arrive at the truth concerning the fire in Chicago. At first, we had to rely on the brief telegraphic reports of excited correspondents, who frequently drew upon their imaginations for their facts, and made much more terrible than the case warranted the condition of things in that city, lamentable as the results have since proved it to have been. We were at first told that the entire city was in ashes; we were informed that the losses amounted to five hundred millions; and that thieves and incendiaries were at work—a number of whom had been caught in their depredations and were summarily disposed of either by hanging or shooting. We are only too glad to find, by the reports now reaching us, that Chicago is not utterly vanished from the face o the earth, that the losses are not half as great as had been stated, and that General Sheridan and his soldiers had not found it necessary to hang or shoot depredators. It is a fearful calamity, it is true; a calamity that has aroused the sympathies of the civilized world; a disaster, the effects of which years of patient toil and suffering can scarcely obliterate; yet, we are enabled to glean some degree of consolation and comfort from the fact that all is not lost while life remains; that, aided by the hand of succor extended by a brotherhood of humanity, the people of Chicago, with that spirit of indomitable will and enterprise which have ever characterized them, will prove equal to what is required of them, and come out of the fiery ordeal, purified, as it were, with strength renewed to push them on in the battle of life in which they are again called to participate. Nor sect, nor creed, nor class, nor condition shall intervene to delay the work of rejuvenation, which from this time forth will move along with giant strides.

We have placed upon our record, in another part of this issue of the CLIPPER, details of the origin, progress, and end of the conflagration, with incidents connected therewith; together with the movements instituted to relieve the stricken people, and brief mention of contributions pouring into the city from all quarters of the world. To these recitals we refer the reader, hoping that, if he has not already, he will at once aid in the noble work now going on throughout the land.

FROM CHICAGO we have the gratifying intelligence that business is being revived in the burnt district, temporary structures being put up, and everybody seems disposed to go ahead. Hundreds of merchants and traders have arrived in New York for the purpose of laying in fresh supplies of goods.

CROWDED OUT.—Owing to the pressure upon our columns, caused by the account of the Chicago fire, and of entertainments held and projected for the sufferers thereby, reports of the Jerome Park race meeting and other events are necessarily omitted this week, but will appear in our next issue.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ Advices from Peru state that the Italian residents of Lima had made arrangements to celebrate the anniversary of the occupation of Rome by the national troops, but the new president of Peru forbade it. The college students determined to hold a celebration on their own account, however, and assembled in the public square. While an oration was being delivered, troops charged upon the assemblage and, though no resistance was made, many were wounded and 500 dragged to prison, among them the Bolivian consul and the secretary of the Chilian legation. THE AMERICA'S CUP.

A SERIES OF RACES BETWEEN THE ROYAL HARWICH AND NEW YORK YACHT CLUBS ARRANGED.

After a great deal of correspondence between Commodore Ashbury, of the Royal Harwich Yacht Club, owner of the Livonia, and the officers of the N. Y. Y. C., we are gratified to be able to state that arrangements have finally been made for a series of races for the possession of the famous cup won from the English squadron by the America, in 1851. At first Mr. Ashbury insisted upon sailing over a course of 53 miles, to windward and return, separate and distinct clubs upon each occasion, desiring also to confine his opponents to keel vessels, and to sail the vessels over a course other than that of the regular club course. To these demands the officers of the N. Y. Y. C. would not accede, as they would not allow the races would not take place at all, Mr. Ashbury going so far as to state that he would sail the Livonia over the course alone on Oct. 13th, and claim the cup, sending her back to England immediately afterward. He also hardly insisted that the club had accepted a challenge from him as the representative of a dozen different clubs, and that they had waived the six months notice in each of the proposed races, which could not well be known to them, they regarded him throughout the negotiations as representing the R. H. Y. C. alone, and they refused to sail against him under any other flag. In reply to his letter announcing his determination to sail over the course alone, and then return to England, the owners of the Livonia returning without a race, returned to their previous proposition to sail seven races, with the ultimatum that they would not recognize any other flag than that of the Royal Harwich Club. Seeing that the N. Y. Y. C. were firm in their refusal to make any concessions to a man who so far overstepped the bounds of reason, Com. Ashbury concluded to alter his determination, and appointing dates for the races to take place as follows:—

Monday, Oct. 16th.—N. Y. Y. C. course.
Wednesday, Oct. 18th.—30 miles to windward of Sandy Hook lightship and return.
Thursday, Oct. 19th.—N. Y. Y. C. course.
Saturday, Oct. 21st.—Lighship course.
Monday, Oct. 23d.—N. Y. Y. C. course.
Tuesday, Oct. 24th.—Lightship course.
Wednesday, Oct. 25th.—Lightship course.

The first race will be sailed on Monday, Oct. 16th, at 10 A. M., from the stake-boat off Quarantine. We remain, &c., yours truly,

MOSES H. GRINNELL, Chairman, PHILIP SCHUYLER,
SHEPPARD GANDY, CHAS. A. MINTON, Sec. of Com.
ROBT. B. ROOSEVELT,

The best four out of the seven races are to win, and the club yacht selected to sail the Livonia will not be named until the morning of each race. The course, over the New York Yacht Club course, is from an anchored vessel off the Hook, near the club anchorage, to Romer Shoal, thence to the Scotland Lightship, thence to the Gedney Channel, thence to the Southwest Spit buoy, designated on the charts as Ruoy No. 10, passing it to the west and south; thence to the lightship, rounding it to the westward and returning over the same course, passing to the east, going and returning, of all the buoys on the west bank, viz., Nos. 13, 11 and 9, and to the westward of the flag-boat stationed near the Quarantine Landing, thence to the finish. Whatever the races over the club course may set their mainsails fore sails and gaffsopsails before starung, unless otherwise ordered by the committee. The signal for preparing to start will be the lowering of the flags on the committee boat, and fifteen minutes after the signal to start will be given, which will be the lowering of the flags and a prolonged whistle from the same boat. The course for the races from the Sandy Hook light-ship will be as follows:—Crossing an imaginary line from the committee boat to the light-ship, and sailing twenty miles to windward, to a stake-boat (steamer); turning that and return, passing between the committee boat and the light-ship. The start will be a flying start. The same preparatory signal and signal to start used for the New York Yacht Club courses will be observed in the races from the light-ship. The races over both the above named courses are subject to the rules and regulations of the New York Yacht Club, and are to be sailed with time allowance. The competing yachts are required to carry their private signals at the main peak throughout the races. The hour of starting over either course will be 10 o'clock A. M. The attention of captains and masters of vessels is called to the following:—

NEW YORK YACHT CLUB SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
NEW YORK, Oct. 13th, 1871.

The New York Yacht Club is particularly anxious that on the days of the races with the Livonia the masters of all sailing vessels and steamers will keep out of the course of the racing yachts, by not attempting to pass to windward or giving them the wash from their wheels, so that in these races the spirit of "fair play," so eminently a characteristic of the American people, be universally shown. C. A. MINTON, Secretary of Committee.

THE LATE SINGLE SCULL RACE OF THE H. A. R. A.—We cheerfully publish the following communication concerning the championship sculling match, at the recent regatta of the Hudson Amateur Rowing Association:—

PHILADELPHIA, October 13th, 1871.

MR. FRANK QUEEN.—DEAR SIR.—In justice to all parties interested I wish, with a view to advance the interests of amateur rowing in our waters, I would request you to notice particularly, and call attention to the late race for single scull shells at Pleasant Valley. It is due to the officers of the H. A. R. A. to say that they did all in their power to secure a fair race; but while it was the duty of all to second them in this endeavor, how were they supported? It is well known that at least two of the participants in the late single scull race were serious ly recommended by some blackguard (his language) to foul me during the race, and in a sculling boat, was managed to give Mr. Lavens the wash for half a mile, while he also managed to interfere with Mr. Gannon, who, with his boat full of water, was compelled to steer out of his proper course to save himself from capsizing. Mr. Lavens, after the race, came to me, and stating over that, Mr. Editor, I am not prepared to say whose fault it was, and think it but just to express my belief that it must have been some "outsider." In justice to the Rowing Association, be it said that Lavens never was instructed to foul me, but to injure my reputation as a sculler needs no such help, and I should be much mistaken if he were satisfied with a victory won in such a way. which, whatever it may be in case of a professional, is worse than a defeat for an amateur. Your correspondent claims that the fine oarsmanship of Mr. Lavens would have won the race in spite of his miserable boat (name), the strange course and rough water, had he been given a chance. The Hudson river is a navigable stream; as such, a public highway, and where everybody has a right to row on it, over it or across it, at the risk of being run down or upset, the H. A. R. A. having no right to exclude boats from the course. The Navy course, in Philadelphia, lies within the boundaries of the Park, and the police see that the course is kept clear. We will probably arrange for a lively series of races next spring, when large amounts will be offered as prizes, and should any New York scullers or oarsmen compete we will guarantee them a clear course, smooth water and no interference, which, as matters stand in New York, are mere matters of chance there. In conclusion, I would acknowledge the courtesy and kindness shown our delegation by the Commodore, and especially by the members of the Gulick Club, particularly Mr. Gannon. Truly yours, NAVIGATOR.

WASHINGTON VS. POTOMAC.—A race came off on the 9th inst. between six oared crews belonging to the above named Washington clubs, three miles. The Washington crew used their six-oared lapstreak Ariel, and the Potomac pulled in the Meteor. The boats were pulled over a course from the Navy Yard bridge, when the Potomacs shot ahead about three-fourths of a length, which they retained until reaching the home stake, the Potomacs coming in in 21 minutes 36 seconds, and the Washingtons in 21 minutes and 42 seconds, the time of the winners being 10 seconds.

THE DOUGLAS CUP.—The race for the one thousand dollar cup presented by vice-commodore Douglas, owner of the Sappho, took place over the same course sailed over for the Lorillard cup, off Newport, R. I., on Oct. 10th. The competitors were the Dreadnaught, Mr. Palmer, and the Midge. It was won by the Dreadnaught by 21 min. and 7 sec.; Palmer second, Madgie third and Wanderer fourth, but the latter was awarded the third place because of the difference in the time of starting. A light wind prevailed during the earlier portion of the race.

A MATCH has been made between the sloop yachts TONY MILLER, belonging to Mr. Lawrence, of Bayside, L. I., and William W. Covert, of the Flushing Club. The match is for $500, and will take place some time during the present month.

JOHN WALKER, of the Dreadnaught Boat Club, and Graham Robinson pulled a race at Flushing Bay, L. I., on Oct. 14th, the former winning.

GRAHAM AND SIMPSON'S QUOIT MATCH.—The return game of the home and home quoit match for $25 a side, between the above celebrated players, 61 up, 18 yards, 3¼ in. quoits, the highest in the aggregate to win, was played at the latter's house, Greenwich road, London, Eng., on Sept. 20th. It will be remembered that Graham only scored 27 in the first game, consequently Simpson had only 28 to get to win. The betting was 3 to 2 on Simpson on the day's play, and 6 to 1 was offered that he won the match, but this met with no response. Simpson won the toss, and started with three doubles; Graham then scored a couple of singles, when Simpson again got in and scored five, making the game 11 to 2. Graham now had a good run, as he put on 13, while Simpson added 5, the score standing 15 for Graham to Simpson's 14. From this point to the 35th end the scoring was pretty even, each alternately leading, till the game stood—Simpson, 24, Graham, 23. The game was after this soon over, as Simpson in the next three ends scored five, thus winning the second game and the match.

A HANDICAP quoit contest is to take place at McLaren's, Newark, N. J., on Wednesday, Oct. 18th, a silver tea set being the prize offered. At the same time and place Sellers and Forrest will play for $100.

THE WILLSHER BENEFIT MATCH.

The second great cricket match gotten up for the benefit of the veteran Kentish bowler, Edgar Willsher, was played at Maidstone, Kent, Eng., between an eleven representing Kent, and one captained by W. G. Grace, on Sept. 21st, 22d and 23d. The attendance on the first two days, when the weather was fine, numbered over six thousand, but the threatening appearance of the heavens deterred many from visiting the grounds on the third, when a heavy rain storm necessitated a cessation of play. We give the score as it stood when the match was discontinued and drawn:—

MANHATTAN VS. JERSEY CITY.—These clubs were to have played their return game at Hoboken on Thursday, but rain prevented. It will be played Wednesday, 18th, at Eobokem, or on Thursday if it rains Wednesday.

"KING'S ROYAL SAUCE."—No less celebrated for the manufacture of the above sauce, than as a pigeon shot, is Mr. William King, who has established himself in the CLIPPER Building, 88 and 90 Centre street, this city, for the manufacture and sale of his widely known "King's Sauce Royal," where he may be found ever ready and pleased to recount his exploits with gun and pigeon; distinguished for being one of the best double shots in the United States, winning sixty-five. His first match in this country was with Dunsian, of Chicago, Ill., Sept., 1850, at 15 single birds each, for $250 a side, the result of the match: King killed all his birds, and Dunstan 14. In August, 1855, he met Cornell, of Philadelphia, Pa., to shoot two matches at 15 double birds each, for $500 a side; in this Mr. King was also successful, killing 27 and 28, Cornell 23 and 24. September of the same year he again met Cornell, in New York, to shoot for $500 a side, at 100 single birds. The result of the shooting showed, King, 96; Cornell, 94. He was not so successful in his next match, which was with B. Duncan, of Kentucky, same mouth and year as his last match, for $5,000 a side, to shoot at 15 double birds each, 21 yards rise, 100 yards boundary; Duncan scored 126; King, 129, no mean work for either party. He met Duncan again at the great tournament in St. Louis, Mo., April, 1859, where 20 members entered at $20 each, 1st, 2d, and 3d prizes; King won first prize. Another sweepstake was made up on this occasion between twenty of the best shots in America, for $50 each, when the manufacturer of "King's Sauce Royal" proved the victor of the first prize, having killed in the two sweeps 103 out of 105 birds. B. Duncan and King again met on the following day, and shot a match King for $2,000 a side, 20 double birds, 40 yards rise, when King once more achieved the victory, killing 21 birds to Duncan's 20. Duncan, determined to have another tourney with King, made a match on the same ground, for $10,000 a side, to shoot at 50 double birds, 30 yards rise, and 100 yards fall, and to occupy two days shooting; but the first day's stakes to the "man-of-sauce" he having led his opponent this was the latter gave in. The stakeholder on 15 birds, when the well known and much lamented Geo. D. Prentice. Mr. King met Duncan again in two more matches, when the former walked off with the prizes. The champion wishing to extend his acquaintance farther among the crack shots, sent a challenge to Bell's Life, London, Eng., in which he offered to shoot at 50 single and 50 double birds against any man in the world. This dell was accepted, and Mr. King found him self matched against a Mr. Freere, of Hampshire, Eng., to shoot on Newmarket race course, (Eng.) for 500 sovereigns a side, to take place on October 13th and 14th, 1859, each party to pull his own trap; Mr. King proved the victor by killing, in the single bird match, 42, and his opponent 39; in the doubles he killed 20 more than Mr. Freere. He subsequently went out West, became the inventor and patentee of the "King's Sauce making more extensively before the public, has ensconced himself and his sauce in our midst. His "King's Sauce Royal," secured by Letter's Patent, Sept. 1st, 1870, to Sept. 1st, 1900, possesses a luscious flavor, gives a perfect charm to the palate, is of vegetable ingredients, and recommended to the dyspeptic and those suffering from indigestion and loss of appetite. It is used in all the leading hotels, restaurants, &c., among which are the Astor House, St. Denis, St. Nicholas, Grand Central, Stevens House, St. Denis, Hoffman House, Delmonico's, and a host of others in this city; and out west it has b come a necessity as well as luxury. For further particulars see Mr. King's advertisement in another part of this issue. Call and see him.

THE SPANISH ARMADA.—Amongst the many ancient bequests to city churches for the preaching of sermons upon various occasions, not the less curious is that of Thomas Chapman, who, by his will, dated March 11th, 1615, left a sum of money for a sermon to be preached every year to commemorate the defeat of the Spanish Armada. His directions are still carried out, the sermon being preached in Bow Church, Cheapside, at the beginning of each August.

CAST UPON THE WORLD.
An entirely original Drama, in five acts, written expressly for
MR. J. K. MORTIMER,
BY CHAS. E. NEWTON, ESQ.,
And produced at WOOD'S MUSEUM, Chicago, with TREMENDOUS SUCCESS, as the following EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESS will prove:—
"* * * The plot is well worked up from first to last; the situations and scenes, while sensational, are consistent and true to the life, and the dialogue appropriate and well put together.
"* * * The play was well received, and many of the scenes received encores. CAST UPON THE WORLD will probably become one among the list of standard modern plays."—Chicago Tribune.
"* * * Was produced at the Museum on Aug. 28th to a well filled auditorium, and was enthusiastically received."—N. Y. Clipper.
"* * * The situations and incidents are quite dramatic and effective. Indeed the play is considerably above the average of sensational dramas, to which school it most unmistakably belongs."—Chicago Times.
"* * * It was produced for the first time in America at the Museum last night, and, to judge from the applause which ballied many of the scenes, it was a TREMENDOUS SUCCESS."—Chicago Tribune.
"* * * The perf rmance is pronounced a grand success over any previous exhibition on that stage."—Chicago Evening Journal.
"* * * As a faithful picture of life and manners in the nineteenth century, we venture to say it is unsurpassed."—Chicago Democrat.
Managers desiring to produce this drama address

MY VISION.

Inscribed to Mollie L. Cooke.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I had been dreaming—in my study chair,
As moodily I sat 'mid shades of even,
Visions came crowding on the dusky air,
Across the windows of my memory driven:
It was a motley throng: I scarcely knew
Or if I were awake, or if were dreaming;
Or if my senses played me false or true;
If 'twere reality or only seeming.

It seemed as 'twere the sunny time of youth,
And flowers were sprinkled where my steps were treading;
And hope and happiness, and love, and truth,
Around my path a web of joy were spreading;
Friends flocked around me, and mid dance and wine,
And strains of rhapsody and music sounding,
Methought untold felicity was mine!
And with astonished delight my heart was bounding.

It seemed as though my dream had many forms,
And rapidly it passed through varied stages;
Now I was threatened with the sounding storms,
And now I read the pleasure's brightest pages;
But 'neath the storm, or in the sunbeam's ray,
One form was ever present to my vision,
Driving the shade we threw my path away,
And charming even sorrow to submission.

Methought we wandered in a shady grove,
And plighted vows of holiest affection;
I pressed within her ear fond words of love,
Of obedient constancy and proud protection:
Her drooping head upon my shoulder hung;
With love's warm rhapsody her breast was heaving;
Her snowy arms around my neck were flung,
While vows of tenderness her lips were breathing.

And then there came an interval of storms.
With dark'ning clouds and lightning wildly flashing—
A rushing to and fro of angry forms.
The elements in strange discord clashing;
But ever by my side that form appeared.
In tears and grief, but yet in matchless beauty;
Fighting with hope against the woe she feared;
Struggling despairingly 'twixt love and duty.

The storm was past; and yet there was no sun.
But all seemed wildest chaos and confusion;
The battle over, but no victory won:
And this appeared my dream's abrupt conclusion.
And yet that form, that voice, that eye was there.
And loving words of love mine ear was drinking;
But still I sat upon my study chair,
Was it a dream, or had I but been thinking?

INFANTICIDE IN ENGLAND.

If we are to believe the medical experts and official returns, which can hardly be doubted because of their systematic record, upwards of three thousand infants are yearly murdered in England. In London, even 481 babies were found dead in the streets in less than eighteen months and numbers disappear without any trace.

BABY FARMERS.

This business, which late enquiries and abortion cases in this country have exposed, government enquiry has just shed up in greater notoriety in England, the details of which we are indebted to a late issue of the Chicago Tribune, as received from their correspondent in England:—

Many women, it is proved, carry on the business of receiving illegitimate children with a deliberate knowledge that the children will die speedily, and with a determination that they shall die. Some gentlemen who put a sham advertisement into the papers a short time back, received 330 offers to take charge of the supposed child for life, for ten pounds; some offered to do it for two pounds. Many gentlemen communicated with a set of abortionists or secret accoucheuses, and by them were directed to the worst cases of baby farms—the two working together. The baby farmers dispose of the children who die in their houses, on the following dismal occasion: they collect their shawls and dropping them through the streets. A woman is now in prison who was found doing this. There were fifteen other children in her house. This woman took them from another woman in the country, who used to advertise in newspapers for something to find homes for children. She would receive twenty or thirty pounds for a child, bring it to London, and put the child out to some one here for five pounds, who would lift. The original "adopting" made a good profit by the babies-out trade. In an old hat in her garden were bonds and securities to the value of eight hundred pounds. There were also some large pits in the garden that had been filled in with a fatty sort of earth mixed with lime and children, and with it was a quantity of small magnets. One medical man, living near Manchester, said to a committee of the House of Commons:—

"When I was at Walh I felt convinced that the people themselves, could in regard to illegitimate children, feel no loss of the sanctity of life. I have been asked myself to kill a child as it was being born, and by a good-natured nurse too, and I am sure she had no idea that it was murder. It was in case of an illegitimate child. They think a baby 'going home,' as they call it, is nothing; they look upon it, too, in the light of a trouble to the mother, from which she would be well relieved. The wish has often been expressed that they (illegitimate children) would 'go home,' and I myself have been made aware that it would be no mercy if they did; and there is one other thing which, I think, is also very pernicious, namely, allowing babes to be insured. I have seen a dying child insured, one that looked practically dying, and I have remarked to other gentlemen present with me that it was no good our attending a child, as a rule, that was insured."

Dr. Lankester has said to people:—"Did you not think it would be a kind Providence to remove that child?" and they have said, "Yes;" and one woman said she had tried to assist that kind Providence. A Glasgow physician hears people in charge of such children say:—"It was nobody's hairs; I was better saw." This gentleman divides the "Infanticide" of Glasgow into three classes—First, men who are either duly registered medical men, or who assume medical titles; second, herbalists who use drugs, and thirdly, fortune-tellers, or what are called 'spae-wives,' who exist to a large extent in London, and who are either abortionists themselves, or 'touters for customers for abortionists.

A CHANNEL HOUSE.

A considerable number of dead bodies having been lately found in a quarter-part of the suburbs, the police suspected a private establishment was at work there, and they watched. The sergeant in the case says:—

"I occupied a furnished room under an assumed name, and after a few nights I saw a young lady leave the house whom I considered had been recently confined, and I traced her to her residence, and further inquiries led me to know that the child had been put out to a woman who advertised in a newspaper. This woman I afterwards found advertised under two names and two different names in one newspaper alone, and ultimately I traced her through writing her a letter in answer to an advertisement which she had inserted in the newspaper wishing to adopt a child. I went to her residence and followed her to, and afterwards visited her house. She denied that she had any children there at all; but I insisted on going into the house, and on a sofa I saw some old rags lying. I removed the rags, and under them I found an infant, all in a state of nudity, and apparently dying gradually through the effects of narcotics."

All these children died! Their food consisted of a mixture of hardened lime, corn, flour, water, milk and washing powder! Can there be anything more atrocious?

NOT ALL ILLEGITIMATE.

The children are not always illegitimate. There is a strange case of an infant which was a baronet at the time of its death. The father was an old gentleman who married a young woman very inferior in position of life to himself, who was a few weeks after-ward confined of a child. The father died just about the time of its birth, and the mother disappeared. Some one then put the young baronet on a baby farm. Dr. Lankester (the coroner) is intelligent with the fathers. "I know," he says, "with regard to Roberts and mothers of those children, where the mother comes with her illegitimate child to the inquest, that in 99 cases out of 100 she never received one penny from the father; and, bad as it is for a man to seduce a woman and leave her in the lurch, there are days as an exceptional man; a man to be held up to imitation in court."

USE OF OPIATES.

Among the honester class of baby farmers a difference is made in the price at which they take children, according as the mother finds the opiate or as they have to find it. It is so much the practice to drug the children that they charge sixpence less a week if the mother finds the opiate. What they do with the children they are sold by druggists, in the manufacturing districts, by gallons. One of the druggists in Manchester is asked:—"Are you well acquainted, as a druggist, with the habits of the poorer classes in your district?" he answered, "I know what is going on, and what is the worst cases of baby farms—the two working together. Then he is asked, "Are they much in the habit of using drugs for their children, to insure quietness or sleep?" And he answers, "Of the really poorer classes I may safely say that there is scarcely a single family in which the practice does not prevail. And why? Why, in this:—the mother goes out to her work in the morning leaving her child in charge, either of a woman who cannot be troubled with it, or with another child of, perhaps, ten years old, who does not understand the management of the child to prevent it being troublesome; the child thus drugged sleeps, and may waken at dinner time; so, when the mother goes out again the child receives another dose; well, the mother and other parties are quite fatigued, and, as they must rise early to begin work for the day, they must have sleep undisturbed by the child, so it is again drugged, and in this manner young children are often drugged for three days and nights. Many druggists are furnished of the demand for such sewice as the baby farmers perform. One case is cited of a lady having paid 10) pounds with her baby, to be taken care of for twelve months only. In another instance a woman, in answer to an advertisement, received thirty letters asking her if she could take a baby from its birth In Marylebone, a witness said he knew a house where they regularly received children from a private lying-in establishment, which, some years ago, was conducted by a midwife. Ladies went there to be confined, and women in a better condition of life, and paid on an average from 35 pounds up to 100 pounds for the confinement, with the adoption of the child. A medical officer of Marylebone describes what a typical baby farm in his district. "The house," he says, "is generally situated in a back street, and either the cellars or the garrets, inasmuch as they are cheapest, are rented by the nurses taking the children. It is unusual to find five children under one month old; but it is not unusual to find two or three under six months, three or four ranging up to six years of age. As a rule, the women who conduct these baby farms are persons of drunken habits; and the witness added:—

"If you go into a kitchen where there is a baby farm, you will find the children huddled together, and the place really stinks; whereas, if you went into a back kitchen in the same place, inhabited by a father and mother and as many as seven or eight children, you would not find that amount of neglect; you would find that the women went out charing, and the man went out, perhaps, two or three days a week; but you would find there an amount of cleanliness and sobriety which you do not find in the other case. In the one case the children are starved and the women live on gin; and they very often give gin and opiates to the children, simply to keep them quiet. The legitimate children are better treated than the illegitimate.

FOUNDLING HOSPITALS.

In the celebrated Foundling Hospital no foundling children are admitted. The system is this:—A woman applies to the governors of the hospital upon a petition stating the outline of her case. She is then examined by the committee, which sits on Saturday. The case turns upon "labeling one of seduction upon the child being her first, upon the desertion of the father, and otherwise upon the good character of the girl. If the allegations in her statement, the committee refer it to an officer of the institution, who, during the following week, makes further inquiries, and on the subsequent Saturday the reception of the child is determined. Two establishments are maintained by the hospital in the country. There is a permanent medical officer at each place to whom £1 a year is allowed for every child received. It is his duty to look out nurses for these children among the cottagers. Then he sends the nurse to London, and she takes the baby back to her home and rears her child. At the age of three years the child is brought up from the country to the hospital in London. The mother has a certificate with the child, with a letter correspondent, by the entry of the child in the hospital books, and also a ticket which is put on the child when it is sent down to nurse. Beyond that she knows nothing of the child. Mothers frequently communicate with the secretary by letter, asking after their children, but without knowing their names, and the secretary answers these inquiries. The mother also can reclaim the child if she is in a situation to provide for it in after life. About forty children—one out of every five applications—are received yearly into the Foundling Hospital. A large number of the fathers have emigrated. Young carpenters and others get into this kind of scrape and off they go. Some cases are of soldiers, and a soldier in his country cannot be made legally liable for the child. There are about 500 children in the hospital. At the age of four teen the boys are apprenticed out. Many are sent into the regimental bands. The girls can remain in till they are fifteen. Once every year, at the Foundling Hospital—the boys one day and girls another—and they receive a small reward if they bring certificates of good character; and at the end of their apprenticeship they are each entitled to a gratuity of five pounds, providing that their conduct has been good during their apprenticeship.

LUDICROUS MISTAKEN IDENTITY.—As a well dressed gentleman was going down Clinton avenue, Albany, N. Y., on the 16th inst., an elegantly attired lady, apparently about forty years of age, rushed up to him and fell fainting in his arms. She was taken to a neighboring drug store, and when she revived she said that years ago her husband departed on a trading expedition to the east, and, having never returned, she had imagined him dead, and the gentleman into whose arms she had fainted bore a most strong resemblance to the husband of her youth, so much so that she would fain believe it was he. After listening to the lady's story the gentleman entered into a long story of his antecedents, which proved to the satisfaction of the lady that he was not her long lost husband.

THE VIELE DIVORCE CASE ENDED.—After years of legal wrangling, the famous suits between General Viele and his wife have been amicably adjusted by the counsel for both sides. The terms of the settlement are that the three elder children (the oldest a daughter of 17, the next a boy of 14) go to live with the parents. The two younger are divided between the parents. The boy, Bertie, aged 7, is given unconditionally to his mother; the girl, Emily, 4 years old, to her father, but is to visit her mother monthly. Mr. Viele has applied in Connecticut for a divorce on the ground of incompatibility of temper, which Mrs. Viele agrees to give him by default.

MORMONS ARRESTED FOR ADULTERY.—George Q. Cannon and Henry W. Laurence were arrested at Salt Lake City, by U. S. Marshall Patrick, on the 7th inst., both charged with lascivious co-habit ation with women. For adultery, growing out of polygamy. Thomas Hawkins was arraigned before Justice Wilcken on the same day, the charge having been made by his first wife. He pleaded not guilty. The United States attorney gave notice that he would be ready for trial on the following Monday.

Among the honester class of baby farmers a difference is made in the price at which they take children, according as the mother finds the opiate or as they have to find it. It is so much the practice to drug the children that they charge sixpence less a week if the mother finds the opiate. THE NEW PLAYS ON THE ENGLISH STAGE.

"REBECCA."

BY ANDREW HALLIDAY.

Sir Walter Scott's novel of "Ivanhoe," rendered in a dramatic form by Andrew Halliday, was presented under the above title on the boards of Drury Lane Theatre, London, Eng., on Saturday evening, Sept. 23d, on which evening the inauguration of the regular dramatic season occurred. We excerpt the following from the Daily Telegraph of Sept. 25th:—

If "Shakespeare spells ruin and Byron bankruptcy," surely Mr. F. B. Chatterton must now complete the lame alliteration of declaring that Scott is synonymous with success. With the cheers of that superb audience of Saturday night ringing in his ears, having witnessed with delight the waving of white handkerchiefs in the pit, and the flinging up of black wide-awakes in the gallery, when Miss Neilson had been called and polled over and over again with the richest stores of Covent garden; when Mr. Phelps, bowing almost to the earth—not having quite put aside the Isaac of York, and assumed his well-known character of the Idol of Drury lane—had been congratulated by hundreds of voices, and when every one had been congratulated by everybody, Mr. Bernard, to the accompaniment of the Lyceum orchestra, Mr. Barry, to Mr. Dormack, the magician, who arranges the glittering tableaux, Mr. F. B. Chatterton, as he stood in the centre of the stage, surrounded by his company, and waiting for the audience to allow the national anthem to be heard, must have blessed the day we all hope my thought occurred to him of arranging for the stage pictures from Sir Walter Scott. * * * * We will now see how far Mr. Andrew Halliday has preserved the spirit of the romance. The curtain rises on the first act, and discovers Cedric's castle of Rotherwood, the ancient gloomy Saxon pile, where in the long hall, the family sup at the dais and the slaves feed below the salt. Gurth and Wamba, in a dialogue which is far too long, converse—as in the book, they should be—before the first tableau is disturbed by the approach of Cedric. The supper, which, for dramatic purposes, is a combination of Prince Joan's supper after the tournament at Ashby and Cedric's hospitable meal at his castle, is interrupted by an application for admittance and, with a popularity, not by the Prior, as in the novel, but by Prince John of all people in the world, and, of course, by the Templar and the Palmer, who brings news from Palestine The challenge by the Templar to the Templar, who has grown cold war on the Saracens of King Richard's followers in Palestine, is a thoroughly sound dramatic point, and at once astired the audience when Palmer gave Templar the lie. The entry of Isaac of York, who in the play, but not in the novel, brings with him his daughter, Rebecca, gives an opportunity for two magnificent receptions for Mr. Phelps and Miss Neilson, and as the play proceeds the audience is undecided whether the interest of the play will depend upon Isaac and Rebecca, or on the Palmer of Templar, or on the early period of the story, before the tournament instead of after, the Norman chiefs plot to seize Isaac and Rebecca; but the Palmer, overhearing their plans, determines to arrange their escape at night. With the aid of Gurth, who, after one whisper from the latter, is ready to turn traitor to his old master's cause, and with a quick eye for the beauty and patient endurance of the long-suffering Jaroise, who, to her as a dancing master engaged at the palace, and tests her goodness and devotion by the dangerous presentation of a ring The incident of the glass slipper is travested by the discovery of a couple of gold shoes left behind by two brigands in a hurried flight from the apartment of the sisters, to whom they have appeared, respectively, as personages of distinction, and, with a due regard to the general fitness of things, these articles establish a clear proof of Rebecca's identity with two notorious scoundrels of whom the chief of Police has long been in search. The triumph of the ill-treated girl over her ill-tempered sisters, is quite as distinctly shown in the present version of the story as in the one more strictly in accordance with the original narrative so repeatedly illustrated in opera, burlesque and pantomime. The most rigid stickler for the integrity of our fair traditions will not find much cause to carl at Mr. Alfred Thompson's treatment of the theme, and in the three admirable set scenes which serve for the three acts, some amazing and ingenious situations are contrived which give a sufficient dramatic interest to the development of an intentionally incongruous story. The dialogue is in some, occasionally too much of, fossil wood in a wonderful state of preservation. The lyrical portion of the text is smoothly written and well adapted for musical purposes. Although not impressing the ear with any strong conviction of decided originality, the music of M. Emile Jonas is always lively and tuneful, and the skill of the composer is advantageously displayed in his orchestral accompaniments, which are admirably executed by the augmented band under the experienced direction of Henry Meyer Lutz. Jarvoted's introductory song, "It Isn't Much Sleep That I Get," in which the alarum of the cuckoo clock and the shrill summons of chanticleer are musically illustrated, may be cited as a clever specimen of imitative composition. The chorus of the pages, and the quaint but fanciful evolutions executed in admirable time, is highly effective; and a concerted piece, in which a dance movement is introduced as suggestive of the lingering memories of the ball, whilst the elder sisters are being brought home in a sedan, is cleverly contrasted in accordance that follows in figurally written, and the finale in the first act is an excellent specimen of dramatic con cotton. Should a quintette in the second act recall some familiar strains, it will, at the same time, show the tact of the musician in interpreting a somewhat fortuitous situation by frequent changes of movement: and the succeeding duet of "Toe Dancing Lesson" will be generally recognized as quite worthy of taking rank with the best of these vocal pleasantries of a kindred nature already so familiar to the concert rooms. The playful rendering of the grim legend of the Archduke's statue, and the pretty romance, "Take back the ring you gave me," are the most prominent musical features of the third act. Throughout the evening the encores were frequent; and, though it seems like a self-evident proposition that an extravaganza which requires two hours and a half for its representation would be twice as popular if it could be compressed into half the time, it cannot be fairly said that any feeling of weariness was exhibited by the audience, who only restricted their demand for repetitions from a growing apprehension of the lateness of the hour. * * An incidental divertissement, introducing the clever Payne family, Mlle Rita, the Misses Southern and L. Wright, who figure as satyrs, nymphs, and Cupid, while the Gaiety corps de ballet, attired in costumes of the daintiest device, go through a series of graceful evolutions, will be found conspicuous among the attractions of the new entertainment. A numerous audience, including the Prince of Wales and suite, gave to "Cinderella the Younger" the most encouraging plaudits throughout the evening, and the perfect success of the extravaganza was further testified by a general recognition at the end, in which the librettist, Mr. Alfred Thompson, and the composer, M. Emile Jonas, personally acquired a large share.

"WATCH AND WAIT,"

A new romantic drama in three acts, from the pen of an unannounced author, was produced for the first time at the opening of the Surrey Theatre, Sept. 23d. It is thus spoken of :—

The student of history will remember that the suppression of monasteries by King Henry VIII. and the alienation of their property created great discontent among the people who derived their subsistence from those charities, and that a formidable insurrection, to which the "Pilgrimage of Grace," took place in the northern counties in the year 1537, but was speedily suppressed. It is at this period the author dates his plot. Ralph Winwood, a merchant, who has amassed great wealth—by no means honestly—advances money to his own ends by denouncing traitors, even if they be of his own household. Among those he denounces is the father of Edwin Talbot, whose family is thereby reduced to a state of destitution. His own cousin, Sir Owen Winwood, who has taken part in the insurrection, is compelled to fly the country, but before departing confides to Ralph's care his jewels and his two daughters, Blanche and Constance. Edward Talbot is engaged to accompany the Baronet, but Ralph's cupidity induces him to denounce them both as traitors, and they are only saved from capture by the intrepidity of the mate of a privateer called Happy Jack (and here we must pause to state that Happy Jack, as he came bounding through the open window of the private room, was received with such an ovation that his fierce looks and menacing gestures directed towards the villainous Ralph had to give place to smiles of gratification at his enthusiastic welcome). After a lapse of four years we find Talbot again in England. Ralph Winwood for his loyalty has been made a knight, and, as a proof of his knightly conduct, he visits poor Widow Talbot's house, and by his brutality causes the death of her daughter Mabel. Poor Blanche, too, is the object of his persecution. He offers her his hand in marriage, in order to possess himself of her father's estate, which was confiscated. Aided by Edward Talbot, and of course by Happy Jack, she and her sister make their escape from his house to Wolsby Castle, the seat of their dying uncle. Here they are pursued by Sir Ralph, who in turn is pursued by Edward, who contends with the knight in a desperate struggle on the highest tower of the castle ensues (evidently suggested by the similar situation in "Notre Dame,") Sir Ralph is plunged headlong from the battlements and Edward is severely wounded by his fall. Sufficient upon the day is the evil and a most effective tableau is here arranged, which elicited deafening applause and concluded the second act. In the third act, after another interval of four years, the scene is changed from Yorkshire to Cornwall, and here the author has showed full scope for displaying his powers, and something really grand and imposing is the result. Sir Ralph, it appears, has miraculously escaped the death we imagined his fall had brought about. Here in Cornwall he is encountered by one Barbara, a poor, half-witted creature, who had been confined in Bluff King Hal's time, as she is here represented as doing, would have certainly been consigned to durance vile. Barbara, however, now not only recognises in Sir Ralph her husband, who has deserted her, but in Happy Jack her own son. Sir Ralph is taken by and by, when I'll marry my own Winnie Lyle.

Many times when the star gleams are shining above,
And the moolight fails o'er the vale,
Then I haste to her side and I whisper my love,
In the sweetest of strains I can tell.
While the peace of the hour and the calm of the night
Weave around us a spell there the while,
And all sorrow and care were far out of my sight
As I look into dear Winnie Lyle.
Chorus—Oh I dream of her face, &c.

Oh the days they are fading away like a dream,
And the sunny-edged future to be
Seemeth to my lone heart like a bright golden beam
Ringing happiness and love for me.
And I hear the sweet chimes of the silvery bells,
As they float on the morning's glad smile,
Ever deep in my heart there is something that tells
I am wedded to dear Winnie Lyle.
Chorus—Oh I dream of her face, &c.

OPENING OF THE NEW THEATRE ROYAL, BELFAST, IRELAND.

This building was opened on Sept. 25th. There are two fronts, one—the principal one—in Arthur square, and another in Castle lane. The house is entirely of brick, with stone dressings. On the ground floor in front of the theatre there are eight ponderous columns of polished Aberdeen granite. The bases are of the same material, but are unpolished, and the capitals at the top are of carved Coalisland stone. They command refined attention, and five arches of red Whitehaven stone, the spandrils between them being ornamented with Shakespearean scenes. The second story consists of a Gothic arcade, with a range of windows, which are of polished stone. There are thirteen arches, each containing a medallion of a celebrated actor or actress Mr Warden's head occupies a position immediately over the dress circle entrance, and the space above the upper boxes is filled with the names of Mrs. Warden, Mrs. Scott, Barry Sullivan, Charles Kean, John Phillip Kemble, David Garrick, Madame Vitsens, William Charles Macready, Samuel Phelps, Helen Faucit, G. V. Brooke, and Kate J. Bateman also appear on this portion of the Arcade. The remainder of the third story consists of a series of small windows, with brick piers, crowned with capitals of Scrabo stone; and the fourth is composed of an arcade of seven arches, in each of which is a long, narrow window. These columns are of polished slate, and the capitals of Coalisland stone. The spandrils, similar to those of the first story, are of red Whitehaven stone, and in them are eight medallions—two of which, however, have been allowed to remain blank, and the other six are filled in with figures of Shakespeare, Schiller, Lytton, Goldsmith, Sheridan and Meyerbeer. The top story is somewhat similar to the third. Long, narrow windows, with brick piles and stone capitals, are the features on this part of the Arthur square front, and above them, in the centre, is a shield with an elaborate representation of the royal arms On each corner is built a chimney On the Castle lane side of the building there are also several carvings of interest, Immediately round the corner from Arthur square, stone busts of Mr. Warden, J. A. Hyde, J. B. Buckstone and Charles Mathews meet the observer's view, and down below, and somewhat further back, the Nurse, in "Romeo and Juliet;" Touchstone, in "As You Like It;" Lord Dundreary; Puck, in "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Falstaff, from "Henry IV." project from the wall. Two of the entrances further back still are embellished with full-length pictures of Sir Boyle Roche, Columbine, and Clown. The top of the lower box door is ornamented with a fine carving of a lyre, supported by two allegorical figures, and the entrance to the upper boxes bears a harp, round tower and wolf-dog. Between the two doors will be a large bishop, and in Castle lane there are two others. The public entrances—four in number—are all six feet wide, and the doors are so arranged that, in case of fire or any other mishap, the crowd rushing outcould not close them up. The stairs are of Ross oak, and each step was built in as the building progressed. The stage door is at the upper end of the theatre, next door to the theatre tavern. The stage cost close on £1,000, and is considered to be one of the most complete in the three kingdoms. From the footlights to the back wall it measures forty-one feet. The entire breadth is fifty-six feet, with a proscenium opening of twenty-six feet by twenty-eight feet The footlights are perfectly in keeping with the architectural arrangements of the theatre. Beneath the stage, on the Castle lane side, are the band, ballet and supers' rooms. In ascending the stairs and passing the "mezzonine floor," the visitor, after climbing close on fifty steps finds himself on a level with the upper circle, which extends from the back of the Burns' premises, is the green room, and immediately behind it the "stars" dressing room. In the next landing there are three rooms, and these are the ladies' apartments, two in number. One is intended to accommodate artistes, and the other seven. On the top flat are two rooms, intended for the male members of the company. From the dressing-rooms there are entrances to the roof, which, when carried out, will command one of the bridges at the back of the proscenium we arrive at the wardrobe, which is lighted from Castle lane, and fitted up with sixteen presses, in each of which there are three shelves. Higher up on the same side is the property room, and above all are the painting-room, carpenters' shop, and what is known as the "gridiron." On the very top of the house, immediately above the stage, a large tank is placed. It is estimated to hold about two thousand gallons of water, and in case of an alarm of fire being given, four jets of water could be instantaneously directed on the burning part of the house. The proscenium looks remarkably well. Like the other parts of the house, the decorations are of white and gold. On the arch are the words:—

"All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players,"

in tastefully executed letters, and below is a beautiful painting of "The Seven Ages of Man." The house is approached in the centre, at the back, listening with attention to an angel, who is inspiring him. To the extreme left of the picture are two head stones, on one of which is inscribed the date "Easter Monday, 1871." The ceiling is a perfect gem. There is a large sunlight in the centre, and from it there radiate eleven panels, on each of which is an allegorical figure. They represent architecture, astronomy, comedy, dancing, music, poetry, memory, painting and tragedy. Between the panels are gilded bars, and the names of the different figures are also gilt. The curtain is green, and the act drop a scene descriptive of the bay of Messina The new Royal is estimated to hold comfortably two thousand people. The theatre was first opened for the same corridor, and are situated at each side of the stage. Independent of these, there are two private doors —one from each of the box stairs. In addition to the public entrances to the boxes, there are two others from the private spiral staircase, which begins on the stage and terminates at the gallery, and the second is at the back of the boxes, and communicates with an iron stair which leads up to the dress circle refreshment room, which is the property of the city, from the river north to Lisburn. The theatre is in close connection with the Queen's Hotel, and attempted to throw passages over the street, but was prevented by the Corporation authorities, who refused to grant the necessary permission. The theatre is lighted with gas, and has a fine ventilating apparatus, which is worked by a steam engine. The theatre is fitted with every convenience for the audience, and has been erected at a cost of £20,000.

BASE BALL.

PROFESSIONALS OF 1871.

As we have so many queries in regard to our opinion of the leading professionals of the season coming in to us at this time, and as such questions are not en regle for our correspondents' column, we have concluded to give a brief review of the players of the ten professional clubs, by way of replying to questions on the subject. We shall begin with the pitchers, and take them up in alphabetical order, beginning with Brainard, of the Olympics.

Acy Brainard has shown marked ability in his position this year, and had the Olympic nine been thoroughly disciplined and harmonious during the season, and also had their battery full strength in supporting his pitching, few, if any, nines would have ranked higher in the record of the play. Brainard's forte is the facility with which he discovers a batsman's weak points, and the skillful use he makes of the knowledge he gains of them. Moreover, he has all the necessary speed in his delivery, is a fine fielder, has full command of the ball and great judgment in using it, and possesses skill in batting. We rank Acy as A No. 1 as a pitcher, and a very desirable acquisition for a club having a well trained and thoroughly disciplined support in corps.

Next on the alphabetical list we find the name of Fisher, of the Rockford nine. We know of no man who has improved in his pitching so much as Fisher. From an awfully wild delivery he has become possessed of considerable command of the ball, and now does what he did not do before, viz., uses "headwork" in his delivery of the ball. He has plenty of pluck and endurance, and not only field well as a pitcher, but is heavy at the bat. Of course we cannot judge of these players by their average of runs earned, first base hits made off their pitching, chances for outs offered, and by other statistics of the kind, which afford a correct criterion of their pitching; but only casually as we remember their play in the games we have reported this season.

Next comes the veteran, McBride, of the Athletic Club, of Philadelphia, as the most experienced swift pitcher in the country. It is questionable whether "Richard will be himself again" to an extent sufficient to enable him to use his well known skill to its fullest advantage for a year to come. In case of his temporary retirement, one of the most effective pitchers in the country has been secured to fill his position. What Dick does not know in playing pitcher's points is not worth learning. One great feature of his play is the confidence he possesses in the Athletic nine inspires. Without him they have been lost this season. With him they whipped the Whites on their own grounds, when otherwise the Athletics would, probably, have lost their most important contest. As Dick is not likely to be in the market while the Athletic Club lives, it is perhaps not worth while commenting on his characteristics any farther.

After McBride comes Martin, of the Eckford nine, the king of medium paced pitchers, and perhaps the shrewdest manipulator of the ball who occupies the position. Martin's forte is in pitching "dropping" balls, and the command of the ball which he possesses; the peculiar curve with which he tosses it into the bat is fatal to every unskilful batsman, provided he has any good support in the field. When Martin attempts speed, however, all the dangerous qualities of his pitching vanish, and it becomes a comparatively easy task to punish him. Some credit his skill to the imparting a bias or "twist" to the ball; that is, in making it revolve as it goes to the bat. But this is simply nonsense, the "twist" given to a ball in pitching rather being a drawback than anything else, as it only bothers the catcher in judging of the rebound. Martin requires a catcher to support him who is not only a sure catch and swift thrower to second base, but he must be especially active in going after foul balls. Creditably as Hicks has filled the position, Martin never had a better hand to catch for him than Jewitt. Martin's pitching, too, especially requires that he should be in command of the nine to the extent of placing them as he may judge suitable for his delivery. It does not follow that he should be captain, but only to have such control as all pitchers should have in directing a field so as to have his men to promptly obey his signals to come in nearer or go out further, etc. This he has not had this season, and hence the number of defeats which the Eckford nine have sustained.

Next to Martin, if we mistake not, comes little Mathews, of the Kekiongas nine, who certainly, in the games we saw him play in, showed a skill few, if any, excel, inasmuch as he possesses not only a full command of the ball, with great speed and considerable judgment in delivery; but he is full of pluck, fields finely in the position, and has remarkable endurance for so small a player. We regret to state, however, that some charges of "dissipation" habits are on record against him, besides a looseness in regard to keeping faithful to engagements, which offsets his ability in pitching to a great extent. These drawbacks can be removed, and must be if he aims to succeed as a professional player; for no matter what a man's strength may be as a fielder or batsman he is useless if he be not strictly temperate, and worse than useless if not reliable as an honorable, square-dealing player.

Next on the list is Mullin, of the Haymakers nine, a pitcher, who, in judgment, speed and general skill, would rank with the best, but for that fatal infirmity, an uncontrollable temper. He has lately improved in this respect, however, and knowing, as he must do, that a quick, ungoverned temper is death to a clear use of one's judgment, and that a pitcher lacking this latter essential is but a second rate man, no matter how he excels in other respects, no doubt next season will see Mullin full master of his temper. When he is well supported and things are working finely in the field, we have seen him pitch in masterly style.

Among the P's we find Pratt, of the Clevelands, a faithful worker for his club, a very swift pitcher, and one whose endurance of excessive exertion is especially noteworthy; for no man works harder in delivering the ball than Pratt. He is a quiet, gentlemanly player, a fine fielder, good at the bat, and a very troublesome pitcher to punish. He wisely remains in Cleveland, and doubtless next year will have even better support than he had this season. He is possessed of most of the essentials of a first class man in the position, and, moreover, is reliable. We rank him with the best.

His namesake, the veteran Tommy, of the Athletics, has not done much in pitching this year, but with practice, no doubt, much of the old force and effect of his play would return. Tom is a model as a square, manly player, faithful and true to his engagements, as all worthy professionals should be.

We now come to Spalding, of the Boston nine, one of the most intelligent players that occupies the position. Patient, quiet, unobtrusive, plucky, and possessing the essentials of speed, command of the ball and endurance, and more than ordinary judgment in estimating the batting powers of his opponents, Spalding ranks A No. 1 in the pitching department, and Harry Wright has shown wisdom in re-engaging him.

Next is Wolters, of the Mutual nine, and a more effective pitcher is probably not to be found in the fraternity. Wolters has been a faithful, earnest worker in the Mutual nine, and with any such disciplined team to support him as the old Red Stockings were, the Mutual nine of 1871 would not have been occupying the fourth rate position they do. Wolters possesses great powers of speed and endurance; never flinches from the hottest balls, and moreover is never found "funking" when the odds in the game are against him, and his task is an up-hill one. He is also very effective at the bat, and with a catcher familiar with his delivery and understanding him fully, his pitching becomes very difficult to punish. With the discordant and undisciplined corps of talented players who were selected to back him up this season, the wonder is that the Mutuals have been as successful as they have been. With a nine thoroughly trained and working together in harmony in supporting him, Wolters would be among the most successful pitchers of the day.

Harry Wright, the change pitcher of the Boston nine, is one of the most difficult pitchers to punish with any effect when he has the proper support given him; but Harry's style of delivery, with its sudden change of pace, requires a very expert man in the catcher's position, and moreover, he should have every man in the field so trained as to be on the qui vive in observing his signal, for it is in his strategic play that Harry especially excels.

Last, but not least, on the list comes Zettlein, of the Chicago nine, known as the "Charmer," a pitcher whose forte is a plucky facing of the ball that knows no fear of the hottest liners and a command and speed in its delivery surpassed by none. Zettlein used to pitch too squarely to be effective, but his Chicago experience has produced a wonderful change in this respect, and he now knows "how not to do it" with the best of them. Zett, however, is not possessed of a superabundance of that element of skilful pitching known as "headwork," although in this his western training has also improved him; but he still needs a catcher of sufficient judgment and experience to direct him. With such support and a club team in the field, and not merely a half trained picked nine, Zettlein will trouble the best nines to punish him with any effect.

It will not be out of place to refer to the professional association rules governing the hiring and engaging of professionals, the most important of which are the following:—

First.—"Any base ball player who is under an existing and valid contract" (viz., a written agreement duly signed and witnessed) "to play ball with any club belonging to this association, shall not be eligible to play with any other such club in a match game until such contract is fulfilled or otherwise legally closed."

Second.—"In all cases where the services of a professional player are claimed by more than one club, each club so interested may elect the president of another club and these two shall have the power to call to the president of a third, and these three shall have the power to send for persons and papers, and decide the question in dispute, and their action shall be binding on the two clubs concerned."

A certain party, whom we shall not name at present, seems to have been ignorant of the above existing laws, or he would not have acted as it is reported he has done. The following will be read with interest:—

ROCHESTER.—"Any ball player who is under an existing and valid contract" (viz., a written agreement duly signed and witnessed) "to play ball with any club belonging to this association, shall not be eligible to play with any other such club in a match game until such contract is fulfilled or otherwise legally closed."

ROCHESTER.—"In all cases where the services of a professional player are claimed by more than one club, each club so interested may elect the president of another club and these two shall have the power to call to the president of a third, and these three shall have the power to send for persons and papers, and decide the question in dispute, and their action shall be binding on the two clubs concerned."

A certain party, whom we shall not name at present, seems to have been ignorant of the above existing laws, or he would not have acted as it is reported he has done. The following will be read with interest:—

A catcher, who is "some on the pitch," lately expressed a desire to join a certain out town of New York state club. The fact was duly made known to the club interested, and ultimately an agreement was drawn up, duly signed and witnessed, and a tender of some three or four hundred dollars made in advance. After signing the contract the player in question appears to have regretted his action, and to have essayed to have withdrawn from the bargain made. The plea he advanced as a fair cause for withdrawal was, that the advance money had not been paid on the day it was promised. Unluckily for our lekie young pitcher, nothing concerning the advance was inserted in the contract, and therefore it was not a legal part of the bond, and the future of the club to advance the money at the time promised, did not invalidate the contract in the least. The pitcher in question, however, thought it did, and being tempted by a larger offer from another club, he has sought to "go back" on his original agreement. This, of course, he will find it impossible to do, unless he can induce the club he engaged with to cancel the agreement. This little occurrence, alleged to be a fact by our informant, should be a warning to professionals not to sign papers until they are ready to fully carry out their engagements to the letter. Last year the breaking of contracts could be indulged in almost with impunity, as there was no code of laws binding upon the professional clubs or players which inflicted a penalty for any such violations of written contracts. Now there is and as it is of vital importance to the pecuniary interests of every professional club that the laws of their existing association should be strictly enforced, there is no doubt but what every rule of the Professional Association, governing the question of the engagement of players, will be duly carried out.

Our next article will be brief comments on in fielders.

BOSTON vs. HAYMAKERS.

On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 7th, was played the fifth regular game of the championship series between the Boston Red Stockings and the Haymakers, who had arrived that morning from Troy. The weather was very unfavorable and the visiting club endeavored to induce their opponents to agree to a postponement, but without success. Finding that the Bostonians were resolved to play, the Haymakers then tried to gain their consent to making the game simply an exhibition one, but in this they were alike unsuccessful, the Reds being resolved upon ending the series then and there. Some one thousand spectators gathered upon the ground, despite the unpleasant weather, and they were repaid for so doing by witnessing their favorite club achieve a signal triumph, brilliantly closing the series in their favor. Play began at 3.35 P. M., with the Haymakers at the bat.

First Inning.—McGeary hit to Barnes and was easily retired. York sent a fly which went squarely into Schafer's hands, but for some unaccountable reason was squarely muffed. Flowers was out by a fly to Birdsall. Flynn then made a two base hit, sending York home. King and McMullin earned first base, but were left on third and second, Pike being third out on three strikes. Two runs.

George Wright and Barnes made safe hits. Birdsall went out on a fly to Flynn. McVey and Spalding then batted safely, and the former got his run on a wild pitch; but "Al" was left on first, Gould going out on a fly to King, and Schafer being retired at first. Three runs. Score, 2 to 3.

2. Bellan made a first base hit. Craver hit to George Wright, who picked up the ball and passed it to Barnes; the latter handed it quickly to Gould, making a pretty double play and the only one of the game. McGeary then went out by Schafer to Gould. No runs.

.....Barrows flied out to Pike. Harry Wright gave a fly to Craver, and George was out at first base, Bellan assisting. No runs. Score, 2 to 3.

3. York was overcome by the agility of "Georgie" and the tenacity of Gould. Flowers earned a base, and went to second on a wild pitch. Flynn fell a victim on the first base. King thought he had a third out, but, sending an easy fly to Schafer, the latter let it drop from his hands, and Flowers came home. McMullin then went out on first base. One run.....Barnes batted for a base, and a wild throw by King made him safe on his second. Birdsall popped a fly into Bellan's hands, and the latter, following Schafer's example, dropped it. Barnes and Birdsall succeeded in stealing home while McVey was going out on a fly to Bellan; Spalding to King, and Gould on the first base. Two runs. Score, 3 to 5.

4. Pike gave George Wright a chance to make his only error in the whole game, which he did by throwing rather poorly to Gould, who did not stop the ball. Pike reached no farther than second base, however, as Bellan was captured on the foul bound by McVey. So also secured Craver on a foul tip. George Wright "cooked" McGeary by taking him on the fly. No runs.....Schafer was caught on the fly by Pike, Barrows succumbed after sending a foul to McGeary, and Harry Wright was third out, by Flowers to Flynn. No runs. Score, 3 to 5.

5. York laid down the bat when McVey took his foul bound. Flowers was satisfied at the way George passed the ball to Gould, and Flynn was another. No runs.....George Wright made a safe hit; Barnes went out by a fly to York, and Birdsall on a foul tip to McGeary. McVey batted safely for a base. Spalding then took the bat and sent the ball far into the left field, taking two bases. He was left on second however, as Gould added another to his list of outs. Two runs. Score, 3 to 7.

6. King cried "enough" when he saw George pick up the ball and gently toss it to Gould. McMullin didn't see his base, for as he couldn't hit the ball after striking three times he was out. Pike then sent a foul bound to McVey. No runs.....Shafer was retired by Flowers and Flynn. Barrows made his first and only base hit, but unfortunately ran on a foul, and was put out. Harry was third out by a fly to Pike. No runs. Score, 3 to 7.

7. Bellan and Craver went out by the fielding skill of Barnes and Gould. McGeary made a safe hit, but was left on third, as York hit a fly to Barrows. No runs.....George Wright sent the last base, Barnes got the ball a way over King's head in the left field and took third base on the hit. Birdsall got first on a square muff by Pike. McVey and Spalding made safe hits and both came home on a wild pitch. Gould then went out on the first base, and Schafer and Barrows by flies to York and Pike. Five runs. Score, 3 to 12.

It was now rapidly growing dark, but the Haymakers went in and made two runs on the next innings, only one first base hit being made. Harry Wright closed the game for the Bostonians by a fine hit, and George got on his first, but at that point fielding the ball had become a matter of great difficulty, and the game was called, reverting of course to the end of the seventh innings. On the whole, the Boston nine played a splendid game. Schafer was not in his usual trim, and, with one exception, the two or three errors which he made are excusable. On the bases he showed well, as usual. The playing of Spalding, McVey and George Wright was nearly as brilliant as in the Mutual game. Bellan made one or two splendid plays and committed but one error. Following is the score:—

BOSTON vs. ECKFORD.

On Oct. 10th these clubs played the fourth and, as it proved, the last contest of their series on the Union grounds, Brooklyn, the attendance not exceeding three or four hundred people, but little interest being taken in the match, for, though it was a regular contest and one of the series between the two clubs, the game likely to affect the position of the Boston nine in the championship arena, as it was simply regarded in the light of an "exhibition" game, and at this season of the year people are not disposed to pay any half dollar fees to witness such unimportant contests.

Both clubs had their full nines out, and, though the weather was windy and cloudy, it was not cold, and, therefore, a good display was looked for, and also a close contest. The game, however, proved to be about as poorly a played one as we have seen this season, the Red Stockings, especially, failing to play up to their high standard of the day previous, while the Eckfords not only fielded badly but did worse—their exhibition being considered discreditable to the club by their conduct towards the umpire, especially that of Nelson, whose ugly temper, with its demoralizing influence on the general play of the Eckford nine, never before being so conspicuously apparent as in this game.

Play was called at 3.12 P. M., with the Boston nine at the bat, and by McVey's fine catch and the fielding of Geo. Wright to Barnes they were neatly whitewashed.....Geo. Wright opened for the Reds with a good hit, but Barnes had a life given him by Chapman, and by McVey's two base hit both got in, one run being earned.

In the second innings, a careless throw and some loose play behind the bat let in a run for the Eckfords, McVey, however, offsetting his error by a fine tip catch .....On the Boston side three easy chances were given to retire them for a blank.

In the third innings the Eckfords were whitewashed, Birdsall playing behind the bat and McVey making a beautiful running catch at right field.....Geo. Wright hit a ball to Nelson's district and made his base, and by a bad throw of Hicks' and another by W. Allison, reached his third. Barnes then hit a fair foul, which Nelson fielded carelessly and threw in wildly, the result being that George scored his run.

In the fourth innings, but for a bad muff of Barnes', the Eckfords would have been whitewashed; as it was, base hits by W. Allison and Martin led to a score of 2 runs. In this innings Nelson was the last batsman, and after striking at one ball he allowed two balls to pass him, which were over the base and within his fair reach, and the umpire properly called strikes on him in succession. This excited his ire to such an extent that he retorted on Mills in an insulting manner, and afterwards displayed his temper in other ways greatly to the demoralization of the Eckfords in the field. Unfortunately the umpire had several close points to decide after this, and, as a matter of course, partial decisions were charged. One ball was caught on the bound within two inches of the ground, which none but the umpire could see, and another instance in the holding of the ball by Gould at first base, which to those who had no partisan eyes seemed a clean out.

From the fourth innings to the ninth the Eckfords did not score a run, and only made one base hit, Harry Wright and Gould making good catches, and Barrow a double play.....On the other side two dropped fly balls on running catches, by Shelly, gave the Bostons two runs, a bad throw by Martin assisting, Nelson, Gedney and Andrew Allison making good catches.

In the ninth innings the Eckfords batted for three base hits after one hand was out, and by some loose fielding got in two runs, which equalled the Boston score, and as the Bostons batted early balls for outs in their ninth innings, the innings ended in a tie, 5 to 5.

There was then quite a talk about playing the tenth innings, and as some remarks were made reflecting on Mills' umpiring, he refused to act further. He was finally persuaded to continue, and the tenth innings was played. By a bad muff of Gould's the Eckfords were allowed to score a run, Shelly and Martin batting for base hits.....The Bostons then went in to try and win. Martin began by failing to give Harry Wright a ball within reach, and Harry took his base on called balls. Geo. Wright then popped up a ball, which Chap man held.) Barnes followed with a hot liner, which Nelson failed to get at in time, and a base was made. Birdsall then hit a pretty grounder safe, and sent Harry Wright home and Barnes to third—one out and two men on bases. McVey then popped up a high ball which Holdsworth could easily have held on the fly, but some one called to him to drop it for a double play, and, in the confusion which ensued, consequent upon a lack of discipline together with the usual growling, the players became bothered and by a wild throw to first base and another muff both the men on the bases got in and the game was lost. Had the fly ball been held, two men would have been out with but the run in, and, as it happened, the third man could easily have been put out. By the call for a double play nothing was gained and the chance of having another inning was lost. We have not seen the Eckfords display less judgment in playing the points they did in this game. With ordinary skill and no snarling third baseman to demoralize them, they would have won the game, as the Bostons played bad enough to be defeated by a far weaker nine. But as it was their chances were lost, and what is more, they materially injured their reputation as a professional nine in good standing by their conduct towards the umpire. The score:—

A "WHAT IS IT" CONVENTION.

Last August a circular was issued under the auspices of parties claiming to be legal officials of the late New York State Association, calling for a convention of state clubs to be held in this city, Sept. 6th. Knowing that the movement was but a duplicate of the same "little game" which was played in Albany last November, no notice was taken of the circular by this paper, the call being also very properly treated with indifference by the prominent amateur clubs of the state. A meeting was held by the leaders of the movement in accordance with the call, but as there was not enough delegates present even to afford the instigators of the so-called convention an excuse for ignoring the parties adjourned over, and on Oct. 6th they met at a house up town and the following report of the proceedings plainly tells the story of the little game that was then and there played:—

"Convention of the Amateur Base Ball Clubs.—The Amateur Base Ball Convention of the State of New York held their annual meeting last night at the Arthur House, corner of Eighth avenue and Fourteenth street. The club was called to order by C. W. Foster, of the Oriental Club, of Brooklyn, and on motion it was passed that the secretary notify all clubs in arrears, the clubs not complying with the rules of the convention to be excluded. The election of officers then proceeded with, Mr. C. H. Wilson, of the Orion Club, being elected president. The chair was then vacated by Mr. Foster, and Mr. Wilson took his place as president of the convention. Mr. William Ray, of the Rockford Club, was elected first, and Mr. C. H. Foster, of the Oriental Club, second vice-president. Mr. John H. Hartley, of the Oriental Club, was appointed recording, and Mr. J. K. Sheard, of the Pastime Club, corresponding secretary. Mr. Joseph H. Horton was re-elected treasurer. The following with their representatives were declared to be entitled to the National Convention at Chicago, 11.—Mr. John Wilday, Mutual Club; Mr. Wm. Glen, Oriental Club; Mr. John Ford, Union Club, or Morrisania; Mr. James H. Conner, Orion Club; Mr. T. L. Hazard, Pastime, and Mr. Foster, Orion Club. On opening the hall clubs represented were the following:—Union, of Morrisania; Orion, Mutual, Pastime, Eckford, Oriental, Eagle, Gotham, Atlantic, Resolute, Central, and several others. The hall was then cleared of all but delegates, and order was under way for the business of the amateur clubs."

Of the clubs named as supporters of this "non est convention" and the Mutual and Eckford prominent members of the National Professional Association, the members of which strongly opposed

BILLIARDS.

OBSEQUIES OF THE LATE MR. MICHAEL PHELAN.—The last sad rites of the greatest and most disinterested friend billiard players ever had were observed on Wednesday, the 11th inst. The church of St. Francis Xavier, in which the requiem mass was celebrated, was thronged, the billiard fraternity joining with personal friends in doing honor to one who had aimed to win the good opinion of his fellow men and had succeeded to a degree which few in his profession may hope ever to equal. The remains were inclosed in a walnut casket, on the lid of which was the inscription:—

MICHAEL PHELAN
Died October 7th, 1871.
Aged 58 years.

The celebrant, who was likewise the officiating clergyman at the grave, was the Rev. Father Killeen, the warm personal friend of the deceased. The services were very impressive. At the conclusion of the voluntary:—"O Take Me!" rendered with much feeling, the coffin lid was removed, and the concourse of billiard players viewed, for the last time, the face of their dead friend. The body was then removed to the hearse, and, followed by mourners in coaches and a long line of carriages, was borne to Calvary Cemetery, and laid in a grave which affection sought to hide with floral offerings. The scene at the cemetery was most affecting, men who had fancied themselves made of sternest stuff having to turn away to hide their grief; and none felt the sad parting more keenly than the pall bearers, chosen, with two exceptions, from such of the deceased's most intimate friends as had never been connected in any way with the profession to which he belonged, and which he had labored so long and so diligently to elevate: Messrs. George H. Howe, G. S. Hubbel, Thos. Patten, Joseph Mouni, N. P. Hayes, William Kennedy, S. Emberson and Christopher O'Connor. During the hours of the funeral, quite a number of billiard rooms in this and other cities were closed as a mark of respect.

CHAMPIONSHIP OF PENNSYLVANIA.—At last there is to be a contest for the championship of the Keystone State—the first since the tournament of 1866. The challenger, it will be seen, is Plunkett's old antagonist:—

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 4, 1871.

E. J. PLUNKETT, Esq.—DEAR SIR.—I hereby challenge you to play me a match game of billiards for the championship of this State, One hundred dollars ($100) a side and the champion cue. The game to be played according to the rules of the Pennsylvania Billiard Congress. I have deposited fifty dollars ($50) as a forfeit with Mr. Emerson Bennett. Respectfully, &c., E. H. NEILER.

LONG ISLAND CHAMPIONSHIP.—The next contest, and the last of the present series possibly, for the amateur championship of Long Island, will take place at A. R. Samuell's room, Brooklyn, on the 17th inst. The players will be Messrs. Rogers and Kirkby. Should the latter be successful, the champion cue he has so long held will become his personal property.

THE GARNIER-DALEY MATCH.—It has been arranged to play the return game for $500 a side, between Maurice Daley and Albert Garnier, at Irving Hall, in this city, on the 27th inst. The closeness towards the close of the contest in Chicago adds to the interest of the pending game, the arrangements for which have been intrusted to Mr. C. O'Connor.

FOLEY VS. SLOSSON.—The match for $250 a side, between George Slosson and Michael Foley, was fixed for the 19th inst., in Chicago. We are not advised as to what arrangements have been made in view of the almost entire destruction of that city. The great conflagration reduced to ashes several of the finest billiard-rooms on this continent.

A LITTLE GAME IN PHILADELPHIA.—W. H. Kuhn, of Rockhill's room, has challenged Peter Nolan to play two games, one 150 points at French caroms, and the other 500 points four ball caroms, for $25 a side and the junior championship of Philadelphia. The first game is to be played within two weeks of the 10th inst. Should both win a game a third will be entered upon.

RHINES AND DALEY FOR $500 A SIDE.—Henry Rhines, of Chicago, and Maurice Daley, of this city, have entered into a match for $500 a side, at the three ball game, 600 points up. It is to be played in this city or Brooklyn within ten days of the return game between Daley and Garnier.

THE TRIGGER.

CHAMPION PIGEON SHOOTING OF THE JERSEY CENTRAL SPORTSMEN'S CLUB.—The pigeon shooting match for the diamond championship badge of the Jersey Central Sportsmen's Club between the present holder, W. H. Dunlap, of Mattawan, Monmouth county, and John Taylor, of Jersey City, was shot near Bergen, N. J., on Thursday, the 12th inst. The conditions of the match were to shoot at 25 single birds, 21 yards rise and 80 yards boundary, H. and T. traps, 1½ozs. shot. The birds were very high, and many of the birds, although hit hard, managed to get away. Mr. Taylor won the match by two birds. The score:—

J. Taylor	1011111001111011111111011—totl 20
W. H. Dunlap	1111111001110111101111101—totl 20

The badge is a combination of medal and Maltese cross, pendant from a dog's head, the eyes of which are diamonds. On the surface of the medal is a beautifully executed etching of a pigeon shooter, with trap and attendant ready to spring the bird. A sweepstakes followed the match, $5 each at ten birds, with seven entries. It was won by Mr. Tom Taylor, who killed his ten birds in superb style: Mr. Tyson killing 8 out of 9; W. Hughes 7 out of 8; J. Pierson, 8 out of 9; W. Hepsey, 9 out of 9; W. Dunlap, 6 out of 8, and J. W. Rapp, 8 out of 8. Miles Johnson furnished the birds.

REPLY OF BOGARDUS TO PAINE.—The champion pigeon shooter sends us the subjoined response to Ira Paine's *de*fi:—

ELMHAM, Ill., Oct. 4th, 1871.

MR. FRANK QUEEN.—DEAR SIR.—I suppose Mr. Paine is waiting my reply to his late challenge, as—for some time I have been as certain as to whether it was worth a reply or not; but, to stop all wrangling and talk, I will make the following statement and proposition, viz., I do not wish to shoot any match with 1¼ oz. of shot, only the badge match, and according to badge rules; but would rather the Rhode Island club would change the charge to one oz., for I think it would require better skill than to use a quart of shot. Mr. Paine says he can beat me with one ounce of shot, and I say one ounce of shot, I will meet him and shoot him for any amount he may name, and at any distance he may name. And further, if Mr. Paine sees fit to shoot 1¼ oz. of shot (?), he can challenge me for the badge and I will thank him for his custom. Hoping this will stop all further idle talk, I subscribe myself your most obedient servant,

A. H. BOGARDUS, Champion of America.

AMERICAN CHESS CONGRESS.—The chess clubs of Detroit and Cleveland have issued a circular detailing the specifications for a proposed AM. C. CONG. to be convened at the Kennard House, Cleveland, on Dec. 4th, 1871. A tournament for 1st and 2d class players, and a problem tourney are already provided for and guaranteed; the various prizes to be enlarged and additional items added should the encouragement warrant. To commence on Dec. 5th. We think it should have been called a Western Chess Congress, but will not stop to quarrel about names, being but too glad if a successful caissan festival can once more be gotten up and carried through in any part of this country. All communications respecting the proposed congress, or for circulars, address O. B. Perdue, Sec'y, 192 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Enigma No. 780.

In giving a little treatise on animals, in the Gentleman's Journal, Herr Meyer says:—"Most problems of this kind have been produced by German composers. We give one by Dr. Wasmann, of Hanover, who is considered the originator of problems of this school. More than thirty years ago Herr Wasmann composed many beautiful problems, and corresponded with Herren Kromm, Judell and Voisange. Many of his problems have appeared in the Illustrirte Zeitung, of Leipzig. Eighty years ago Herr Wasmann, then a young Bremen, was still fond of chess, and occasionally favored us with problems and solutions. The specimen herewith given is from the private collection of Herr Theodor Judell, of Hanover."

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Oct. 16th, '71.

The all absorbing topic of the day is the conflagration of Chicago, the Young Giant of the West, a description of which calamity may be found in another part of this issue of the CLIPPER. It gives us much pleasure to state that among the first to come forward to the relief of the unfortunate people of the Garden City were our professional friends, many of whom, at the earliest realization of the dire disaster which had befallen that city, tendered material aid in the shape of money, clothing and provisions, and a series of benefits for the sufferers was arranged in all parts of the country, a number of which have already been brought to a successful issue, while others are in progress; some, we regret to say, have not realized the great expectations of their projectors, while others, we are happy to record, have eventuated in the most cheering results. Among individual contributions that have come under our notice may be mentioned that of Lester Wallack, of this city, who, at the first note of distress, sent forward one thousand dollars in aid of the afflicted people; Edwin Forrest donated five hundred dollars; James Melville, the great equestrian, sent in our care, one hundred dollars for the relief fund. Every manager, every member of the profession, no matter how exalted or how humble the position they occupy, seems willing and anxious to assist in the good work, those whose means will not permit of their contributing money placing their services at the disposal of managers and others who are getting up benefits. That the excitement created by the great fire of the great West has interfered with business is not to be denied; and, although some places have been largely attended, yet nearly all have experienced a falling off from the previous week's receipts. As it is in New York so it will be in other cities; in fact, in other cities, we fear, the disastrous effects of the conflagration will be more severely felt than in our metropolis. Chicago's places of amusement are all gone, burned to the ground in the sea of fire which swept over the business section of the city like a great tidal wave; her people have no time to think of amusements now; they must clear away the wreck, build the city up afresh, get the machinery of trade in working order again and give the young giant a new lease of life before recreation and amusement can be thought of; and yet, with all her go-ahead, truly American nature, the Chicagoans possess, it is not unlikely that we may witness the opening of some place of entertainment before the month closes, for nothing is impossible with the progressive spirit of the West. In the meantime, let the work of brotherly kindness go on—let contributions pour into the coffers of the desolated city until relief shall have been extended to all sufferers, and the entertaining wedge once again for a grand revival of trade, ensuring a feeling of confidence and safety and might until the young city shall again arise "like a giant refreshed." That the conflagration may be numbered among the most destructive in the world's history, cannot be questioned; it was grandly fearful and terrible; it was as if the great day of judgment had come, and many persons in their flight fell in the tracks and were swallowed up in the fiery flood. It proved to be a tragedy that the World can never forget—a tragedy with its blood, and fire, and suffering, and anguish that the mimic stage cannot portray; a sensation drama with tumbling walls and burning bridges, and explosions of gas and powder, and the crushing in of temples of the Most High and temples of the drama alike, all going down in one common ruin, the flames only arrested, after fruitless efforts of man, by the gentle dews of heaven. Let the next drama in Chicago be "Help," and let it have a run until all shall have felt its genial influence.

CHICAGO'S DIRGE.

Like the damned soul's vision—
Like Pluto's derision
Of the West's prosperity—
On came the seething, sweeping flames,
Fires hurled out from hell, for earth's no names
Thereon to bestow.

Emblems of human power,
Buried in an hour,
As dire adversity,
Nor Etna's, nor Vesuvius' dearest fibre
Could aught with those squelching flames compare
Their hellish glow.

From house-top to house-top,
Like a hurricane lop
Raged Chicago's fire—
Aria, trades, and Religion's shrine
Made to its wild and ruthless sway resign,
Mid Jupiter's ire.

The doleful, warning bell
All the day did tell
The awful fate—
Till like hell's grim, selected hosts,
Mid fire quintescent their vengeful ghosts
Sprang heedless on.
With pale hunger allied,
With death and want beside,
Naught could abate.
Then humble man to God on high appealed,
And at His bidding Pluto's minions yield—
God hath won!
Prostrate, drear, and low,
Chicago's mighty brow
Quakes the land,
And a million hearts with sympathetic zest,
Dole out their tributes to the stricken West,
While earnestly and loud
Each citizen is proud
To extend his hand.

.....They say" that some unscrupulous, heartless creature has invented a talking machine; that he is already in this city with his merciless contrivance, and that he seriously contemplates inflicting it upon an already outraged and afflicted people. "They" further say that this infernal machine has been brought to such a state of perfection that it will roar you like a sucking dove, or howl like a raging lion; that it laughs, hollers, and otherwise imitates the human machine in its worst phases, and so on. We enter our solemn protest against the introduction of any such wicked contrivance; we raise our warning voice in behalf of suffering humanity, and calm'y request the inventor to go away and take his diabolical contrap ion with him. We want no more talking machines; goodness knows we have more than we can endure in the shape of lovely woman; what mechanical contrivance can hope to compete with her? Be warned in time, Mister Man; go away; go peacefully if you will, but forcible if you will not. Our heart goes out towards you—we warned in time—destroy it," and we will ever pity. Perish in your malicious persecution of humanity, and your doom is sealed! We are raising a vigilance committee in this city—we know some of its members—they are foes to the enemies of the human race—they are sworn to squelch all "rings," and "machines" and other inventions intended to subvert our republican form of government. This vigilance committee we will push upon your diabolical track; it will pursue you like a blood hound until every vestige of yourself and machine is annihilated. Now mind, we have said it. We give you timely notice. The women are with us in this movement; they will not tolerate the presence, much less the practical operation of anything intended to interfere with their rights. The Statutes are with us, too, to a man! How say but little, but look out for them when they get started. Flee from the wrath to come, Mister Man.

Oh, have you no sister, have you no brother,
Have you no kindred, have you no mother,
Nor any other feline?

We have said: tenth moon, big Monday, all day Sunday. Hole in the Day has spoken—cheese it.....Arts fade, states fall, and even the great Globe itself must come to grief. Yes, dear friends; we had a Globe Theatre in this city, but its ex-Spencers were too much for it, and it stopped revolving; but it shall rise again, dear friends; like the fabled bird, it shall rise from its ashes, spread its pinions, and soar again into the regions of theatrical space. Our Globe is to be reinhabited to-night, peopled, as it were, with a new class of recruits, the Globe and and all that in it is to be under the control of John Stetson, who is a live manager, and one whose success in the Hub augers well for his progress as spokes-man in the Metropolitan commonweal. Let us give the new comer a cordial welcome, since he has so generously undertaken to carry our Globe upon his shoulders.

Oh, give the Globe a chance, pooty boys;
Its value to enhance, pooty boys;
Let all turn to, to-night,
Pile in with all your might,
And give the Globe a chance, pooty boys.

.....We are being deluged with music, it's either a feast or a famine with us. When we had no opera, no concert, no music of any kind, nobody thought it worth while to drop in upon us, but now that we have a surplus of musical notes every opera and concert troupe wants to get in to help to swell the loud hosanna. We have the Parepa-Rosa opera troupe at the Academy, with rather more Parepa than Rosa, for while the former is a trifle too thick, the latter is a little "too thin." But they are doing comfortably up there, and everything looks rosy for Ross. Then at that huge barn of a place, the Stadt Theatre, in the Bowery, where you get into the parquet from the second story, through a sort of hall way leading down towards the stage, and in which you may get lost if you are not careful—they have the German tenor, Theodore Wachtell, who has been setting his fellow-countrymen wild with his musical flights and creating an enthusiasm seldom witnessed in this city, with, what our Italian musical critics call, his ut de poitrine. We forget what they term it in German, but the English of it is singing up to the upper C in a clear tone, direct from the head or chest, or trunk, as the case may be. He sails the high C's over with but a slight ripple in his wake, and as he goes up he brings the house down. The is certainly a marvelous tenor—and, what we seldom find in a good singer, he is also a capital actor. It would do you good, fellow citizens, to witness the dideos and enthusiasm of the German element who help to throng this mammothian Bowery theatre. Women and men alike clap their hands and cry "bravo!" in English; they squirm and bend forward so as not to lose a note, and we betide the wretch who makes a noise while Wachtell is singing. Carl Rosa is "in" in the Wachtell speculation, and he is salting down many rations of filthy lucre for the trouble he has taken in bringing to our notice this German musical wonder. Then we have had what are called the Dantley-Dolby concerts, but "one thing or another" prevented a general outpouring of the people, and Dolby, like alas, poor Yorick's skull, must feel considerably chap-fallen; otherwise, he has no saintly happiness. Ducats do not flow into his money box like chaff before the wind, neither does a rapid current of guilders cheer his guileless way. Then we are to have the Moulton concerts, which have been moulting for some time, and which are intended to present to our notice an American lady. Now, the question arises, will not this fact of her being an American militate against her success? We put it as a conundrum, leaving it to the lively imagination of the well-informed reader to solve the mystery. Altogether, we are having a high old season of music, with more musically liquid notes, we fear, than there are other notes to liquidate them.....'Our Jim" has gone out to Chicago to see what he can pick up—in the way of news, he says, but other people have different ideas on the subject. We have half a mind to send him from him, and that was to inform us that he had not been hung to a lamp post. And so, we will now drop the subject.

Miss Fanny Mordaunt made her American debut on Monday evening, Oct. 9th, in the character of Mrs. Oakly in the "Jealous Wife," which, we believe, she acted for the first time. Taking which into consideration and considering the natural nervousness attendant upon her first appearance before a strange audience, she acquitted herself creditably. She has a pleasing face, a plump, rounded figure slightly inclined to embonpoint, a well modulated voice denoting much power and strength, and was elegantly and tastefully costumed. The comedy was well acted throughout. On the 12th Miss Mordaunt appeared as Peg Wollington in "Masks and Faces," likewise acting that role for the first time. That she took great pains with the character was evident, yet we cannot pronounce her efforts completely successful. She exhibited a tendency to overact, yet she unquestionably possesses considerable dramatic ability, which study and practice only are required to fully develop. Severe criticism under the circumstances which we have recorded would be unjust, and therefore we defer enlarging upon either her merits or deficiencies, until she shall have become more accustomed to the surroundings of the theatre and the tastes of American audiences. Mr. Fisher's impersonation of Triplet, which has borne the impress of excellence for many years, surpassed his former efforts, being mellowed and thoroughly artistic. During the early portion of the third act the bedewed cheeks of a large portion of the audience attested the naturalness of his highly pathetic acting. His performance upon the violin was vigorously applauded and redemanded, which was cheerfully acceded. Mr. Rockwell acted Ernest Vane in a conscientious manner. Mr. Montgomery was not up to the mark as Colley Cibber. E. T. Ringgold acted Sir Charles Pomander with ease and dash. Snarl was effectively impersonated by G. F. Browne. Soaper and Quin, by Holland and Leonard, were acceptable. Mr. Quigley gave a bit of excellent acting as Burdock. Mabel Vane found in Mrs. Jennings an excellent representative, she being natural and effective. Miss Mary Lenoyle's elocution, as Kitty Clive, was too pronounced and of the high tragedy order. She was apparent in the delineation of the remaining characters. For this evening, Mr. Charles Mathews is announced to make his first appearance at this theatre, acting in "A Curious Case" and "A Game of Speculation."

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM, Miss Lucille Western and James A. Herne acted during the past week, save on Friday evening and the Saturday matinee, in the drama entitled the "Child Stealer," and on the exception of the performances above named they acted in "East Lynne." With Miss Western's strongly characterized impersonation of Margaret Rookley the public are already familiar, and we need only add that her performances during the past week were quite up to her usual standard. The support rendered by the stock company was effective. Miss Western and Mr. Herne closed their engagement, which has been one of the most successful ever played in the Museum, with the evening performances of Oct. 14th. At the usual matinees, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Hall have acted in the "Orphan's Dream," and the farce entitled "Brother Bill and Me." For Oct. 16th, the "Octoroon" is announced for production.

WACHTEL, the tenor, has achieved one of the most pronounced successes that has hitherto marked the career of any operatic artist in this city. His audiences have not diminished, and the same furore of enthusiasm greets his every appearance as hailed his initial performance. At first the exuberance of demonstration seemed to be due to a national feeling upon the part of his countrymen, but as his performances progressed a large American element permeated the audiences, and in enthusiastic demonstration they seemed to far surpass the Teutonic element. This was accomplished by the undeniable presence of rare talent, combining a phenomenal voice under high culture, and great histrionic ability. Had he not become a great tenor, he would undoubtedly have become a great actor. At the age of some fifty-five years, with his powers in apparently full vigor, he comes to a new hemisphere unheralded, and achieves a success which fully equals, if it does not surpass, that accorded him in the old world. During the past week he sang on Monday in "Stradella;" Wednesday, in "Der Troubadour;" Friday, "Der Postillion de Lonjemeau," and Saturday in "Lucia von Lammermoor." On Wednesday evening, notwithstanding the violent storm, long before the opening of the doors a vast assemblage blocked the street in the vicinity of the theatre, and at the rising of the curtain the auditorium of the Stadt Theatre was filled in every part, persons standing in the aisles and lobbies. Although not in quite as good voice as usual, owing, no doubt, to the high temperature which prevailed in the auditorium, the evening being quite sultry for the season, still his performance of the role of Manrico is deserving of the highest praise. He sang the opening serenade charmingly. In the rendering of the aria, "Di Quella Pira," at the close of the third act, he achieved his greatest success of the evening, striking the ut de poitrine apparently with the greatest ease and giving it with a full, clear, chest tone. The audience seemed wild with delight, cheers and bravos rent the air; hands and feet were almost frantically exercised until he re-appeared and repeated the performance, singing this time in Italian—the language in which the opera was written—which greatly enhanced its effect. At its conclusion, a storm of applause potent as at first greeted him, nor did it subside till he had some five or six times re appeared before the curtain to bow his acknowledgements. The "Miserere" in the last act was most effectively rendered. With the exception of Clara Perl, whose acting of Azucena was artistic and whose rendition of the music was deserving of high praise, there was nothing in the cast worth particular mention, although the other artists labored conscientiously.

MRS. CHARLES MOULTON, who has long been celebrated in the circles of fashionable society, not only in this, her native land, but in the chief cities of continental Europe, as the possessor of a wonderful voice under a high state of cultivation, has decided to appear in public, and is announced to sing in concert at Steinway Hall on the evenings of Oct. 16th, 17th and 20th, and at a matinee performance on the 21st, when she will have the assistance of Miss Agnes Palmer, contralto; Signors Giorgio Roncoli, baritone; G. Leoni, amateur tenor, and Pablo Sarasate, violin virtuoso; together with a grand orchestra under the direction of Sig. Carlo Bosoni.

DAN RICE'S PARK PAVILION CIRCUS has been well attended during the past week upon those evenings suitable to performances under canvas. The show, as a whole, is an excellent one. Dan Rice personally appeared each evening.

THE BENEFIT OF THE B. P. O., OF ELKS, which took place at the Academy of Music, on the afternoon of Oct. 12th, was numerously attended, the proportion of ladies in the audience being large, and the entertainment must have realised a very handsome sum, which will enable this order, renowned for its charitable deeds, to extend its beneficent influence. The performance was an enjoyable one, and concluded with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," with certain lodge rites, by all the members of the order, closing with a grand "walk around," in which all the performers joined. Want of space forbids our referring to the performance in detail. This was the fourth annual benefit of the order, and the receipts will reach nb ut $2,500.

F. MOONEY & Co., advertise several valuable snakes for sale.

MR. MOORE, printer, located at the northwest corner of Bleecker and Broadway, generously offers to print gratuitously all tickets used by theatres or other places of amusement giving benefits for the Chicago sufferers

RELIEF FOR THE CHICAGO SUFFERERS.—A series of benefits have been arranged to take place in this city for the relief of the Chicago sufferers, a part of which have already occurred and the balance will take place almost immediately. All the performers and attaches of the various theatres, minstrel and variety halls, the circus and various musical troupes, have promptly volunteered their personal services. The first benefit that took place in this city, as well as the first one that was announced, was that given by Dan Rice at his Paris Pavilion Circus in Fourteenth street on Friday evening, Oct. 13th; the receipts amounting to $401 65, which included a donation of $50 handed to Mr. Rice by Mr. W. H. Reagan. On the 14th, matinee performances were given at Bryant's Minstrels and the San Francisco Minstrels, but the attendance was not large at either place owing to the fact that neither company have been in the habit of giving matinees and the very brief time allowed for advertising. The Parepa Rosa English Opera Troupe gave a performance on the evening of the 14th, when Mme. Parepa Rosa, Mrs. Van Zandt, Mrs. Clara Doria, Mrs. Cook, Messrs. Castle, Karl, Campbell, Cook, Seguin, Hall, Ryse, and the entire orchestra offered their gratuitous services. The board of directors of the Academy of Music offered the house free, and the stockholders gave up their boxes and seats. The performance consisted of the second act of the "Daughter of the Regiment," the second act of the "Bohemian Girl," and the third act of "Satanella," which drew a large attendance. A matinee performance was given at Association Hall on the 14th, when the following artists volunteered their services:—Prima donna, Mme. Gazzaniga; Albites, Miss Nininger, Miss Graziella Ridgway, Miss Leontine Mendes, Mme. De Lussan, Mme. De Rytner; tenor, Mr. W. J. Hill; baritone, Mr. J. R. Thomas, Mr. Geo. Gilbert, Mr. Frank Bartlett; Mr. J. Levy, cornet player; pianists, Mr. J. N. Pattison, Mr. L. Albites, Mr. L. Steffenone, Mr. G. Riva; organists, Mr. Wm Berge, Mr. E. J. Biederman and Mr. A. L. Mora. On Sunday evening, the 15th, a concert was given at the Grand Opera House by James Fisk, Jr.'s Ninth Regiment Band, Signora Crescenti, vocalist; Mlle. Castellan, violinist; Mlle. De Pry, violoncello; Henri Drayton, J. Levy, cornet artists; Templeton, Dwyer, Shattuck and Oberist, the quartet of the San Francisco Minstrels assisting, and Carl Bergman acting as musical director. The receipts were one thousand two hundred dollars. This afternoon, 16th, matinees are announced to be given at the Fifth avenue Theatre, when "Divorce" will be acted, at the Olympic Theatre, when "Humpty Dumpty" will be performed, with all the incidental attractions, and at the Bowery Theatre, when "Oliver Twist" will be presented—Miss Lucille Western, J. A. Herne and W. H. Whalley, giving their services gratuitously, in addition to the regular company. The entire receipts of the Museum of Anatomy for this day and evening are to be donated. On Tuesday, the 17th, at the Grand Opera House, a matinee performance of "Eileen Oge" will be given, with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, who, with the en ire company, orchestra, and attaches, have volunteered their services; on the same afternoon Mlle. Aimee and the company and attaches give gratuitous aid in a performance at Lina Edwin's Theatre. In the evening Mr. Bandmann will give a benefit at the Stadt Theatre, when he will perform in "A Gage of Love," in the language, the use of the theatre having been given by Messrs. Carl, Rosa and A. Neuendorf, and all the artists and attaches volunteering. The entire receipts of Dr. Kahn's Museum for the 16th and 17th are to be donated. On the 18th a matinee performance will be given at Niblo's Garden, the chief features being a delegation from Bryant's Minstrels, Mr. Wehli, pianist. Miss Emma Howson and Dan Bryant in the second act of the "Colleen Bawn;" Mr. Henri Drayton will sing a descriptive ballad entitled the "Queen of the Mississippi City," the music of which has been composed expressly for the occasion by Signor Operti, and the last three acts of the "Streets of New York," with Frank Mayo and the regular company. On the same afternoon the receipts of the regular matinee at the Union Square Theatre will be donated. On the evening of the same day Mr. Dolby's ballad troupe will give the receipts of their concert at Steinway Hall. On the 19th a matinee benefit will be given at Tony Pastor's, and at Wood's Museum the entire receipts of both the day and evening performance will be donated. The same evening a benefit performance will be given at Booth's Theatre. On the afternoon of the 22d a grand combination benefit, given by all the managers of the city, will take place at the Grand Opera House. The salient features of the performance as far as known at the present writing will be:—"Katherine and Petruchio," in which Edwin Booth, J. K. Raymond and Miss Laura Keene will be the central figures; an act of "Camille," in which Miss Agnes Ethel and Frank Mayo in the leading roles; Mrs. and Mrs. W. J. Florence in one of their specialties; a portion of the Parepa-Rosa English Opera Troupe; Dan Bryant, Nelse Seymour and Little Mac; Tony Pastor; Henri Drayton, vocalist; J. Levy, cornet; Mr. Wehli, pianist; Miss Emma Howson, Mary Wells and others, and a delegation from the San Francisco Minstrels. On Sunday, Oct. 22d, the first in a series of popular sacred concerts to be given at Steinway Hall, under the management of Dr. L. Damrosch, will be a benefit for this fund. A matinee benefit will be given at the new St. James Theatre—which opens on the 23d—on Wednesday, the 25th. The Amateur Dramatic Association will give a performance at the Union League Theatre early in November, the price of admission to be five dollars, and the tickets are already being rapidly sold. During the past week a meeting of the theatrical, operatic, minstrel and music halls was held at Booth's Theatre to devise means to raise a fund for the relief of the sufferers in Chicago, and the above announcements are the result of that meeting. The following gentlemen were elected a committee of arrangements:—Mr. D. Harkins, of Fifth Avenue Theatre; Mr. H. Magonigle, Booth's Theatre; Mr. Dan Bryant, Bryant's Minstrels; Mr. Freligh, Bowery Theatre; Mr. Niblo, Grand Opera House; H. D. Palmer, of Niblo's, President; Edwin Booth, of Booth's, Treasurer; John F. Cole, Grand Opera House, Secretary. The entire receipts taken at the door of the American Institute Fair on the 13th were donated. The B. P. O. of Elks have decided to repeat the performance given at the recent benefit, and donate the entire receipts. It will be a matinee performance at the Academy of Music on October 26th.

THE FOLLOWING DONATIONS have been made for the relief of the sufferers in Chicago, Ill.:—Mr. Lester Wallack sent a check for $1,000 in anticipation of a benefit. Should the benefit yield a larger sum the difference will be forwarded; if a less amount the check still to be retained. Little Mac, of Bryant's Minstrels, during the early part of the past week, forwarded one hundred loaves of bread. Mr. James Melville, the equestrian, sent in care of the CLIPPER, $100, and Messrs. Woodruff and Nichols, glass blowers, exhibiting at the American Institute Fair, gave $76 25—the gross receipts for one day.

WE HAVE JUST LEARNED that Dr. Kahn's Museum has been turned to a most profitable account, and that is the performance of the comedy of that name at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, where it continues to attract audiences that fill that cozy little theatre in every part. Being light and spirited in action and dialogue, charmingly acted, while the ladies are magnificently as well as tastefully costumed, it offers a very pleasing enjoyment for an evening.

AT THE UNION SQUARE THEATRE Miss Lizzie Kelsey, Messrs. W. P. Sheldon and A. R. Kennedy made their first appearance on Monday evening in the burlesque entitled "Cinderella," in which Mr. Leffingwell acted Clorinda. The ballet entitled the "Pearl of Italy" was performed by Miles. Bonfanti, Bertha and the corps de ballet. The other performers are the same as at the opening of the season, Professor Hilton, ventriloquist, appears this week.

PETER CANNON, an Irish patter vocalist, commenced an engagement at Tony Pastor's on Monday evening, 9th, and made an unqualified success, being re-called each evening some six or seven times. His make-up and delineation of the peculiarities of the Irish character are among the best we ever beheld upon the varieties stage. His dialect is excellent and his songs have the charm of novelty. Among the other distinctive features of the programme may be mentioned Miss Adele Parrott, a pleasing singer and serio-comic, the character songs of the misses Jennie Eagan and Josie Farran, who both possess beautiful faces and shapely forms; the character songs of Miss Bertha Foy, and the dancing of her little sister Ida; Johnny Queen in dances whica display great rapidity of motion; Tony Pastor in his comic songs, which were well received; Mr. and Mrs. McAvoy in a character sketch arranged from the "Rough Diamond;" magical tricks by H. W. Eagan, comically exposed by Frank Kerns, and several sketches in which other members of the company appeared. Cool Burgess is announced for this evening, October 16th.

FELIX VINCENT, the popular comedian, sailed for England, by the Atlantic steamship, on Saturday, Oct. 14th. He expects shortly to play a leading Irish character in London, but the engagement was not definitely closed at the time of sailing.

THE GLOBE THEATRE is announced to be opened this evening under the management of John Stetson, who has the reputation of being an enterprising caterer for public amusement in the variety hall line, as has been evinced by his management of the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass. The following performers are announced as composing the company:—Miss Adah Richmond, burlesque artist and vocalist; Robert Hart, Ethiopian comedian, his first appearance during four years; Harrigan and Hart, song and dance; Gus Williams, comic; the Boston Quartet, consisting of H. A. Frail, Byron George, H. Murdoch and C. H. Henry; El Nino Eddie, tight rope; Johnson and Powers, song and dance; the Misses Lillie Hall, burlesque artist; Elise Scott, Ada Boshell, and Julia Melville, burlesque artists and dancers; George Atkins and N. D. Jones, comedians; Mr. Louis A. Zwisler will be the treasurer.

AT THE BOWERY THEATRE Mr. J. B. Studley commenced an engagement on Monday evening, 9th inst., and upon that, and the following evening, in the drama entitled the "Dream of Destiny." On Wednesday and Thursday evenings he performed in "Money and Misery" and the "Irish Outlaw." On Friday, "William Tell," followed by the minstrel scene from the "Three Fast Men," and concluding with the "Ragpicker of Paris," constituted the bill. On Saturday evening "Brian Boroihme," "Nick of the Woods" and the "Game Cock of the Wilderness," constituted the attraction for the closing night of Mr. Studley's engagement. This evening Joseph Murphy commenced an engagement, appearing in Fred. G. Maeder's drama entitled "Help."

WILLIAM HENDERSON was in the city on Friday last en route to Long Branch, N. J., for the purpose of removing his family to Providence, R. I., where he will manage the new opera house now being built in that city.

AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS the "Wig Wags," an eccentric dance, per ormed by Newcomb, Gibbons, Cheever and Kennedy, was a feature of the past week. "Skylight Adventures," by Billy Birch and Billy West, and Charley Backus' imitations of actors were revived for the first time this season. Some changes were made in the first part and the popular pantomimic sketch concluded the entertainment.

MR. FRANK MAYO has achieved a genuine success by his performance of Badger, in the "Streets of New York," at Niblo's Garden, and by his spirited and easy action, combined with the timely interpolations in the role, he has given it a freshness and added a zest to the entire performance which is thoroughly enjoyable. The attendance has been large, and it is thought that if Mr. Southern's forthcoming engagement did not preclude it, this performance would fill the theatre for weeks to come.

M'LLE AIMEE commenced a season of opera bouffe at Lina Edwin's Theatre on Monday evening, Oct. 9th, when "La Perichole" was sung, with M'lle Aimee in the title role, and Ferdinand Noe as Pequillo, in lieu of M. Jullien, who was prevented from appearing through indisposition.

"EILEEN OGE," at the Grand Opera House, has achieved a sterling success, and, we think, is destined to run for some few weeks to come. Messrs. Baker and Cole have already in active preparation a new drama by J. C. De Leon, the author of "Pluck" and "Jasper," entitled "Paris; or, Days of the Commune," said to be in a prologue and three acts. The scenery, which, it is said, will be very elaborate, will depict prominent points in Paris which the Commune has made so familiar.

THE LARGE AUDIENCES that nightly throng the auditorium of the Olympic Theatre to witness "Humpty Dumpty" attest the genuine success it has achieved. It is not to be wondered at, as the performance, as a whole, is one of the best ever offered in this city. G. L. Fox, as the clown, is constantly changing the business here and there, throughout the pantomime, which relieves his role from monotony, while the various artists who perform the specialties labor as contentiously to please as they did during the earliest performances.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE is announced to be opened for a season this evening, Oct. 16.h, under the management of Josh Hart, aided by John R. Topham, as treasurer; G. L. Stouts, as stage manager; H. Wanemacher, as orchestral director; and the following company:—Charles White, the veteran Ethiopian comedian; Johnny Wild, comedian; Larry Tooley, Dutch comedian; J. The piece possesses the elements of popularity; there is a well constructed plot, plenty of incidents and striking dramatic situations, and the interest is well sustained throughout. The acting of Miss Kunkel as La Vavasour was marked by much ability, and Mr. G. D. Chaplin presented a highly finished portrait-ure of the calm and callous Strathmore. The attendance during the week was small. Miss Addie P. DRAMATIC AFFAIRS IN PROVIDENCE, R. I., are reported as follows by our regular correspondent, under date of Oct. 14th:—"Joseph K. Emmett performed 'Fritz, Our Cousin German,' to the evident satisfaction of a large audience, in Harrington's Opera House, on Oct. 9th. An equally large audience, on the 10th, greeted his feeling portrayal of the character of Carl the Fiddler, in the play of the same name.....J. M. Ward's performance of 'Through by Daylight,' on the 11th and 12th, was witnessed by audiences nearly filling Harrington's Opera House, notwithstanding unfavorable weather.....On the 13th Miss Kate Reignolds performed her own dramatic version of Mrs. Stowe's late and popular novel, 'Pink and White Tyranny,' with the assistance of a company under the management of Mr. E. M. Leslie. The cast of characters was as follows:—Lillie Ellis, Miss Kate Reignolds; Rose Ferguson, Emma Reignolds; Grace Seymour, Emma Hall; Belle Trevors, Hattie Wilbis; Mrs. Follingsbee, Mrs. E. M. Leslie; John Seymour, W. G. Pope; Harry Endicott, C. R. Salter; Dick Follingsbee, T. L. Burns, and Mr. Danforth, G. Wilson. Of the dramatization of the novel, Mrs. Stowe, in a letter to Miss Reigno ds, speaks in terms of strong commendation. The part of the wayward and petulant Lillie was played with spirit and grace by Miss Reignolds. Much of the dialogue in which Lillie participates is sprightly, and there are several telling scenes in the play, in which Miss Reignolds drew the hearty applause of the house. She infused a great deal of genuine pathos into the closing scenes, in which the fair heroine becomes repentant and confesses the errors of her life to her indulgent and devoted husband. The largest audience of the week witnessed this play. 'Pink and White Tyranny' was first performed in Lynn, Mass., about Sept. 1st, since which time it has been produced in the principal towns of New England. To-night the same company perform Mr. Leslie's version of Charles Reade's 'Terrible Temptation.' They go hence to Hartford and Springfield.....For the coming (this) week, John Collins, the Irish comedian, is announced to play the 'Colleen Bawn,' under B. F. Lowell's management, on the 16th and 17th.....John E. Owens is billed to appear in 'Everybody's Friend' and 'Solon Shingle,' on the 18th and 19th; Lydia Thompson and her troupe are set down for the last three evenings the week.....In addition to the gratuitous assistance at the forthcoming benefit to Mr. J. Delmon Grace, of this city, on Nov. 9th, as announced in last week's CLIPPER, the proprietors of the Adams House have generously tendered their hospitalities to those actors who come from other cities to take part in the performance."

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS in Galveston, Texas, are reported by our correspondent, writing on Oct. 9th, as follows:—"The past week has been a disastrous one. On Oct. 2d we were visited by a severe storm which raised the tide of the bay to such a fearful height that the Tremont Opera House was entirely surrounded by water, and the performances for that evening abandoned entirely. Tuesday was a lovely day, and the streets were quite dry. The storm having completely demoralized the gas department, Messrs. Greenwald Bros. resorted to the lighting of the hall with oil. The attendance was not so large as usual, but may be considered fair. The 'Colleen Bawn' was acted and repeated the three following nights; it drew only moderately on the second and third nights, but on the fourth night the burlesques of 'Pocahontas' was added and the house was much larger. The former piece was presented with entirely new scenery, painted by Mr. C. Evans. Danny Mann, as personated by C. T. Ricketts, was well played; Vining Bowers rendered the part of Myles Na Coppaleen in fine style; as Eily O'Connor Miss Alice Brooks was admirable; Hardress Cregan was well sustained by C. J. Fyfe, and Miss Emma Whittle looked lovely as Ann Chute, and acted in a creditable manner. The other parts were well played. The entire company is entitled to praise in the rendition of 'Pocahontas.' G. W. Mitchell, as Pow-ha-tan, made a decided success. Mr. Fergusson, as Capt. John Smith, sang well and acted with much spirit. Jennie Clifford is now an established favorite, and, as Pocahontas, she gained new laurels, her dancing being received with favor. The play on the 7th was 'Dick of the Woods,' which was presented in good style and passed off with but one mishap, which was in the scene where the Avenger crosses the waters—the back curtain caught fire by accident, but was soon extinguished. Mme Methua Scheller will make her first appearance on the 12th in the 'Lady of Lyons.'"

PIKE'S OPERA HOUSE, Cincinnati, under the management of John T. Ford, gave the first benefit for suffering Chicago, Miss Jane Coombs and her company volunteering for the performance. EDWIN ADAMS opened an engagement at the Academy, Cleveland, O., for six nights, on Oct. 9th—our correspondent, writing on the 13th, says—"with Enoch Arden, supported by Mrs. Effie Ellsler, her first appearance this season. Tuesday and Wednesday 'Enoch Arden' was repeated, and also at the matinee Thursday afternoon, for the benefit of the Chicago sufferers. Thursday night 'Marble Heart' was produced. To-night (Friday) the benefit bill consists of a re-production of 'Enoch Arden,' in which Mr. Adams will make his last appearance. 'Under the Gaslight' will be presented at the matinee to-morrow, and the Lafayettine Lass' constitutes the bill for Saturday night, with Bella Golden as Ruth Kirby and Martin Golden in the role of 'A Party by the Name of Johnson.' Business has only been fair."

FROM BUFFALO, N. Y., our correspondent sends the following report, dated Oct. 14th:—"At the Academy of Music, on the 9th, the stock company produced the drama of 'Henry Dunbar' in fine style, and to a full house. Mr. Mordaunt and Miss Waugh, especially, as artists of the highest order, and are spoken of in terms of praise by all. As Henry Dunbar, in the play of that name, Mr. Mordaunt surpassed all expectation, and Miss Waugh's Margaret Wentworth was indeed a happy effort. On Tuesday evening, 10th, Mr. Joseph Murphy opened to a good house in Mader's sensation drama of 'Help.' Much improvement, both in characters and scenery, has been made in this piece since its production here last season, while the cast is infinitely superior. In his Irish character Mr. Murphy is inimitable, while his German impersonation and song and dance melange are rendered in fine style. He is also master of the bones, his horse race imitation being wonderfully natural. On the support, Mr. Mordaunt's Tracy Randall was given in that gentleman's usual vein; Miss Waugh as Elinor was almost perfect; Miss Lawrence, as Fanny Smart, executed a clog with Mr. Murphy with much skill; Miss Thompson's Lillie Waldro was fair; Mrs. Hodges, as Mother Kit, gave great satisfaction; the part of Laura Freeman, by Miss Smith, though limited, was rendered well; Mr. Haviland's Capt. Waldro was acceptable; Mr. Rogers, as Andy Wirebrick, gave a truthful portraiture of the exquisite; Mr. Hodges' Shivers was well portrayed; Mr. Gray, as Nubbles, could not have been cast to a character more fitting his abilities; Mr. Wright's Charley Waldro deserves especial mention; the characters of Hop, Skip and Jump, by Messrs. Jones, Kenney and Savage, elicited much merriment; Mr. Howard's M. P., in make-up and portrayal, was capital, and the character of Little Harry, by Miss Louise Locken, was charmingly rendered. The play has drawn good houses during the week. To-night the entire gross receipts will be devoted to the sufferers by the Chicago fire—the whole company volunteering. Monday evening, 16th, Mr. Neil Warner, supported by Miss Grace Rawlinson, will commence a week's engagement, opening in a New Way to Pay Old Debts,' Mr. W. as Sir Giles Overreach, and Miss R. as Margaret Overreach."

Schwartz, second low comedian; Mrs. W. Henderson, juvenile lady; Miss Birtie Smith, leading heavy; Miss Louisa Watson, first old woman; Miss Anna Newmann, soubrette; J. B. Forrester, treasurer.

THEATRICALS IN BROOKLYN, last week, were materially affected by the calamitous news from Chicago, especially during Monday and Tuesday evenings, and many of the attendance at all the houses improved. The programme of the week at the new Brooklyn Theatre opened with an excellent performance of Sheridan's spicy "School for Scandal," with Mr. and Mrs. Conway as Sir Peter and Lady Teazle, both of which were admirably performed, Conway's Sir Peter being one of the best on the American stage. The cast included Mr. Farren as Mrs. Candor, Mr. Chippendale as Sir Oliver, and Mr. Lamb as Crabtree, all of which characters were well sustained. Mr. J. R. Healy essayed the part of Joseph, and Mr. Frank Roche that of Charles, but neither were up to the required standard, especially the former, who was quite one of his line. Miss Fisk made a failure in the part of Maria, by dressing the character to suit the period, with a domonstrative Grecian bend, a chignon and a pigeon bust. The comedy was well placed upon the stage. During the week the "Lady of Lyons," and "Guy Mannering," were performed, the former only indifferently. the original music of the latter being well rendered. On Saturday Mrs. W. H. Leighton appeared for the first time in Married Life and "Sketches in India," in neither of which did she appear to advantage. In the comedy, which was very well performed, Miss Minnie Conway played her part in a spirited manner. This week the "Lancers" will be presented with a strong cast. Friday evening, Oct. 20th, is set apart at the Brooklyn Theatre for the benefit of the Chicago sufferers. "Divorce" is underlined for early presentation. The theatre is now in good working order and the audiences are quite fashionable.

THINGS THEATRICAL[1] in Boston are thus alluded to by our correspondent, under date of Oct. 15th:—"At the Boston Theatre on Oct. 23d Edwin Booth will make his first appearance in Boston for two years as 'Hamlet'.....At the Museum there has been offered a miscellaneous comedy attraction the features of which have been 'Palace of Fruit' and 'My Turn, Next,' 'School for Scandal,' 'My Uncle's Will, and 'Sweetcearis and Wives,' 'School for Scandal,' 'Wild Oats,' and 'The School for Scandal.' On Monday afternoon, 16th, there will be an extra performance at this house for the benefit of Chicago, and when Mr. Halliday's new play, 'Great Expectations,' will receive its first representation in this country. 'Great Expectations' will be continued throughout the week, and the next novelty will be 'Daisy Farm'.....The Globe has produced 'Dot,' followed the last two evenings by 'The Live Indian,' a specialty of Mr. Owens. Dot was beautifully played by Mrs. Barry, whose impersonation was already familiar to our public. The other parts, with the exception of Bertha, suffered materially from being compared to the acting we have been before accustomed to see in these characters. Miss Orton pleased very much by her quiet and exquisite acting as the poor blind girl. On Monday night, 16th, there will be an entertainment, the entire proceeds of which are to go to Chicago. The programme, as announced, is to be 'Still Waters Run Deep' and 'Captain of the Watch.' On Tuesday 'Divorce' will be presented at this theatre, for the first time in Boston. It will be continued for the present, and is understood to be cast to the entire strength of the company."

NILSSON, during the past week, was at the Boston Theatre, appearing in opera. On Monday night, "Faust" was presented, but the troupe did not make a particularly fine impression; on Tuesday, with "Barber of Seville" was given, with Rosconi as the barber, and M'lle Duval made her debut in America, on this occasion, as Rosina. She is young, pretty, and has a good voice, which she has perfect control of. On Wednesday, "Lucia" was given, with M'lle Nilsson as Lucia, and Sig. Brignoli, who made his first appearance in Edgardo, and "Martha" was sung on Thursday night, with the following cast:—Lady Henriette, M'lle Nilsson; Lionel, M. Capoul; Nancy, Miss Cary, and Plunkett, M. Jayret. Each of these characters was played and sung well. In this performance the chief laurels, however, are due to M. Capoul. On Friday night, "Le Fille du Regiment" was the attraction, with M'lle Duval as La Fille. She gave great satisfaction, but the rest of the performers deserve no praise. On Saturday afternoon, "Faust" was repeated. Throughout the week the attendance has been good. The night of the 14th was set aside for the benefit of the Chicago sufferers. President Grant was present, and, of course, met with an enthusiastic reception. The entertainment consisted partly of dramatic selections, but mostly operatic. The entire receipts were added to the Chicago relief fund. For the present week, "La Traviata," "La Sonnambula," "Lucia," and probably "Don Giovanni," will be given.

On this occasion Miss Jenny Busk, a young lady of this city, well known in musical circles throughout the country, made her debut on the operatic stage, as Isabella, in 'Robert le Diable,' and was most favorably received. Her voice is clear and full, and her articulation distinct; and, although not displaying great power, in consequence of a slight nervousness, we predict a brilliant future for her." The performance was one of unusual excellence, and Madame Rosa carried the house by storm by her brilliant vocalism and splendid acting in the role of Lucrecia. Mr. Aynsly Cook, as the Duke, was excellent, and Mrs. Seguin divided the honors of the evening in the role of Orsini, her rendering of the Brindisi being loudly encored. Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card, with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of entertainments will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties. Cards are only issued to correspondents of the amusement department of this paper. Parties applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider silence a negative.

MEMBERS OF THE PROFESSION who suffered by the late conflagration in Chicago, Ill., who may desire to advertise for engagements, are informed that the advertising columns of the CLIPPER are open to them free of all charge.

MESSRS. LEON AND HOGLE, skilful gymnasts, publish a card, directed to managers of circuses and variety theatres, soliciting engagements, and in which will be found their address.

MONZERT NATIONAL THEATRE, Buffalo, N. Y., is announced to be opened on the 30th inst. with a first class variety company. For additional particulars read advertisement in another column.

SINGER'S THEATRE COMIQUE, Wilkesbarre, Pa., is in want of talent and a good leader, as will be seen by Jake Berry's card in another column.

A PRETTY PRECOCIOUS CHILD tenders his services for stage dance training. See statement by "Blonde Ringlets" in our advertising columns.

THE OLYMPIC MUSIC HALL, of Philadelphia, furnishes its patrons with an interesting variety programme, the principal performers being Charlie Devere, Patsy Shay, Joe Mack, Dan Howard, Billy Wright, Mollie Haverley, Zeidie Blood, Louisa Payne Wray and Miles. Henriett's and Georgia. Tony McCrystal is proprietor; Joe Mack stage manager; Prof. Wilson, leader of orchestra, and Harry Conner, treasurer. Belle Lewis is a new star attraction for the current week.

M'LLE CAROLISTA, Clara May, Miller Beall, Sam R. Orme and Harry Jefferson were performing at the Varieties, Norfolk, Va., during the past week, and the Jerome Family of vocalists and dancers is underlined to appear on the 16th.

HANK GOODMAN is fulfilling a brief engagement at Mozart Hall, Buffalo, N. Y., at the expiration of which he returns to East Saginaw, Mich., for one year's engagement. Among the principal performers there are Miss Annie Hill, Indian club swinging; the Jerome Brothers, double clog, and J. W. Shiphard, Ethiopian comedian.

THE FIFTH AVENUE OPERA HOUSE, Pittsburgh, Pa., is now open under the management of V. E. Beamer, with a good company. First class stars and combinations can be engaged by addressing as per card in our advertising columns.

AT LON CHAPIN'S VARIETIES, Scranton, Pa., the stellar attraction has been Miss Annie Hindle, character vocalist. Miss Annie Harrison, danseuse, put in a first appearance on the 9th, giving the best of satisfaction. Friday night the troupe gave a benefit for the Chicago sufferers, and netted over $300 for the fund. The new faces announced for this week are Alf. Miles, comedian, and Miss Victoria Ross, danseuse.

AT WILD'S OPERA HOUSE, Syracuse, N. Y., the bill has been changed every other night during the week, and some very good new talent has been added. There has been a good attendance. The De Lave children, Lila and Zoe, the Mastio family, are the principal stellar attraction. Zoe's perilous "Leap For Life" from the dome of the theatre blindfolded, and turning a summersault during the flight, was thrilling. Mr. Sidney Franks and Emma Allord are still retained on the bills, and add much to the success of the entertainment. Johnny Shay, song and dance man, has been well received. Hen. Mason and Della Herd have sung with good effect. Mr. Mason appeared again as the Dutchman in the sketch entitled "Glances at Syracuse," to much better effect than last week. The Kimball Sisters closed their engagement Oct. 7th, and were to appear at the Olympic Theatre, Chicago, Tuesday, Oct. 10th. They arrived in Chicago Tuesday morning to find the theatre burned and the city in ruins; they were obliged to go supperless for a glass of water. After enduring many privations they returned to Syracuse, when Mr. Wild kindly re-engaged them; they have appeared to good advantage in a musical sketch called "Clouds and Sunshine," in which they render several popular airs with good effect. Mr. E. S. Ferguson made a capital hit in the character of Jakey Goosegreen, in the comic dance of the Dixie Circus during the week. The proceeds of the Saturday matinee were donated to the Chicago relief fund. A good house was present and an excellent bill was presented. The Warren Sisters, Mr. Sam Devine and Mr. James Clark are announced for this week. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 13th.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS AND WOLFE'S VARIETIES, Pittsburgh, Pa., the company has been smaller than the bill heretofore this season, but under the skillful handling of stage manager Fitzsimmons the members have been worked to the best possible advantage and a really good entertainment has been given. Frank Bell is the only new appearance. His eccentric song and dance is liberally applauded. He does a very enjoyable essence and altogether he is a clever performer in his line. On the 13th Manager Sims gives a benefit for the relief of those who were rendered destitute by the recent fire in Chicago. The entire receipts will be turned over. The following people leave after the 14th inst., by expiration of engagements:—Pedanto, Donaldson, Prof. Davis, Mike Kahane goes to Baltimore, Md., and Hurley and Marr to Indianapolis, Ind. Tae following will be among the new comers, commencing on the 16th inst.:—James Gaynor, Maggie Nichols, Minnie Gray, Mlle. Clinetop and Lucy Adams. So wrote our correspondent, on Oct. 13th.

SHELBY'S COMIQUE, Buffalo, N. Y., continues to receive a large share of patronage, the house being filled nightly. The performances this week opened with the minstrel scene, the ballads of "Little Footsteps" and "Molly Dear," by the Misses Jennie Weston and Malinda Nagle, being rendered in pleasing style. The first part closed with the "Railway Smash up" by the company. For the olio Miss Clara Day sang very sweetly, "Dear Mother, I've Come Home Again." Miss Jennie Weston gave a dance, and was encored. Dan Shelby's "Pathetic Effusions" were received with roars of laughter. "Walking in the Starlight," by Dan Gilroy and Miss Nagle, exceedingly well rendered. Miss Flora Weston's comic songs received a double encore. Shelby's burlesque of "Neck and Neck" was immense. The skipping rope dance, by Miss Nagle, was well executed, Miss Bonnie Nelson's "Racketty Nell" was given with animation and received deserved applause. The burlesque of the "Fakir of Jave," by Messrs. Hart and Redmond, was extremely amusing. The Misses Jennie and Flora Weston's double song and dance, "Waiting for a Broadway Stage," was one of the features of the programme. Hart and Miller gave a ludicrous act entitled "Take It, Don't Take It, Do Take It," which elicited peals of laughter. Miss Agnes Sutherland's Scotch ballads were rendered in a style at once pathetic and pleasing. This lady has a fine soprano voice, clear as a bell, and her re-appearance at this theatre was hailed with pleasure by her many admirers. The performance concluded with the burlesque of "The Female Swimmers," which needs only to be seen to be appreciated. This piece alone would suffice to fill the house nightly. For this week Orville Pitcher, general variety busiuess, will open on a brief engagement Oscar Wilson (not with Unsworth's Minstrels) will make his re-appearance on the 23d. So wrote our correspondent, on Oct. 23d.

JOHN DENIER AND MISS MAGGIE WILLETT commence an engagement at Low Pike's Theatre Comique, New Haven, Conn., Oct. 16.

AL MOR, the skater, was presented by his wife, while at Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 5th, with a bouncing little boy.

IT IS RUMORED that Fox's old theatre on Walnut street, above Eighth, Philadelphia, will be opened during the coming winter with a variety company.

AT VALER'S WINTER GARDEN, Philadelphia, Miss Maggie Bowers, in serio-comic songs, and Miss Mary May, in characteristic songs, are the principal attractions.

AT A MEETING of Philadelphia Lodge of Elks, held on the 14th inst. in Philadelphia, one hundred dollars was donated to the sufferers by the late fire in Chicago.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Detroit, Mich., on Monday, Oct. 9th, Alice Bateman, song and dance artist, and Wm. Noonan, Ethiopian comedian, made their debut, meeting with success. On the 12th the Zitella Troupe, Miss Frank Carlisle, danseuse, and the Brevier Brothers, trapezists, appeared, in addition to the other stars. The Zitella Troupe is very fine, and met with a hearty reception. In the slack wire performance Miss Juanita Zitella far surpassed her rivals, and at once became a favorite. The Brevier Brothers are very daring, and executed their acts creditably. Clara Butler has a very strong contralto voice, and pleases her auditors. Manager Welch has put in a new front to the theatre, which is surmounted by a Mansard roof, the appearance being very fine.

AT THE VARIETIES, Peoria, Ill., a good business was done the past week. On Monday three new people made their appearance—Flora Belle, vocalist; Julia Emmons, danseuse and song and dance, and Ned Ainsley, general performer. Mr. Metcalfield is a determined worker, and his efforts are being duly appreciated.

TREMBLE'S VARIETIES, Pittsburgh, Pa., under the management of Fred. Aiken, is evidently in a flourishing condition, as may be observed by their card and offers for extra talent in another column.
